TM DEFENDED

I am a long-time reader of the Bay Guardian and have always appreciated your concern with social progress and truth. Therefore I am appalled at the misinformation presented in Mickey Friedman's reviews of the books on Transcendental Meditation and Herbert Benson's Relaxation Response (4/23/76). I have been practicing Transcendental Meditation (TM) for several years and can testify personally to its many benefits to myself and hundreds of others.

The conclusions drawn by Mickey Friedman indicate a serious lack of understanding of both techniques. Benson's self-taught technique may provide some degree of relaxation, but it is a diversion from the authentic Transcendental Meditation technique whose more profound effects have been scientifically verified. An experiment conducted by the State of Pennsylvania Department of Welfare showed a great disparity between the relief of stress symptoms afforded by Benson's technique and the more effective TM technique. Also, none of the subjects continued participation in the Benson technique, and some switched to the more enjoyable TM.

On the benefits of Transcendental Meditation, the logic of Zionism, the regal mantle of the mayor and the great Monopoly hoax

Further, there could be an element of danger in the Benson technique. The sound proposed as a vehicle for gaining rest may not be compatible with the nervous system of each individual, whereas in TM the sound is chosen specifically to be harmonious with that individual's nervous system and to produce maximum and lasting benefits for him or her.

JEWISH RIGHTS

I am writing in response to Lorraine Thiebaud's letter in your 4/30/76 issue. She complains that the early Zionists bought land in Palestine and evicted the Arab peasants. Apparently she is telling us that the general rule that people have a right to live on land that they own does not apply to Jews. Or that Jews don't have a right to own land.

The Jews of Israel are subject to world criticism for purchasing and defending a homeland. Yet, with very few exceptions, every mile of national boundary in the world today is the result of force and violence.

How, for example, did the Arabs come to possess some twenty nations, stretching across North Africa through central Asia? Through warfare is how. Originally the inhabitants of the Arabian peninsula, they fought for and conquered a vast territory under the banner of Islam, some 1200 years ago. Similarly, European Christians conquered and took the lands of the natives of the Americas and of Australia. So why pick on the Jews?

Zionism is not a program to take over the world or to subjugate anyone. It is quite simply the feeling of national identity amongst Jews. If "Zionist logic" is bankrupt, then so are all feelings of belonging to a nation, whether geographical or mental.

ODORS OF CRONYISM

Now that the strike is over, Moscone has really let the cat out of the bag regarding where he really stands: squarely in the pockets of the labor bosses and totally in opposition to the wishes and interest of the general public.

I voted for Moscone, and I heartily regret it. I expected a fresh breeze of reform, and instead got the same old foul odors of special interest cronyism. If any recall petitions get started, please let mine be the first signature.

I just can't get over his monumental arrogance in saying, "I'm going to try to get the Board of Supervisors in a position where they view public sentiment in this case for what it was, and that it is no mandate for the people of this city to treat their working men and women as insignificant puppets in government. . . . I want them to be much more careful about their relations with working people" (interview reported on May 9). The mayor feels it is all right, apparently, for certain working men and women to trample on the general public. The mayor had better wake up and realize that the public's attitude is not one of mere sentiment but of proper, righteous outrage at what the crafts unions have perpetrated on the people of our city.

Moscone further shows his arrogance in his contempt for the initiative process whereby the citizenry gets to vote on vital issues, saying, "It is very much out of hand. . . . I think we're slipping very deeply into the habit of sending controversial issues to the electorate under the guise that it can't be wrong to let the people vote on the subject." Moscone wears Alioto's regal mantle very well these days.

REMEMBER HENRY GEORGE

Burton Wolfe's article on Monopoly [Guardian 4/23, 4/30/76] is a delight! His excellent research shows that the cover-up of the game's true origin, while being a financial move to protect patent profits, has also served to obscure the single-tax reformist purpose of its real inventor.

This latter cover-up ties in with single-tax history in general. The single-tax on land values is the remedy proposed by Henry George in Progress and Poverty (1879) to abolish poverty and establish economic justice by eliminating monopoly privileges, principally land speculation. The years 1879-1917 saw a steady increase in single-tax activity, as this (radical) reform was publicly debated, as it became the platform of several political parties and candidates, and as states began to amend their constitutions to allow for its implementation. Eminent thinkers who supported the taxation of land values included Clarence Darrow, Leo Tolstoy, Albert Einstein, Louis Brandeis, Winston Churchill and George Bernard Shaw. It is a fact that when Henry George died (1897), the New York Times compared him to Abraham Lincoln in popularity and public tribute paid him by Americans and people the world over.

Yet today, less than 80 years later, few people even recognize George's name. Fewer still understand land-value taxation or can evaluate its social implications. Speaking generally, today's young social studies students do not get to consider the fundamental questions: "Who owns the land? Who should own the land? How is land ownership related to other social problems?" Further, today's college economics students are subjected to a program of mind-befuddlement, as they are asked to accept imprecise terminology and to learn complex but irrelevant formulas; all the while the more telling concepts of land ownership, privileges, subsidies, and monopolies are glossed over or concealed altogether. Finally, when adults seek information from newspapers, TV or radio, they get millions and millions of words that convey very little real thought, while again fundamental facts like land and resource ownership are generally ignored.

Meanwhile, the Howard Hugheses of the country continue to amass millions of dollars in real-estate fortunes. (Locally these tycoons are often those who perpetuate "Manhattanization.") And meanwhile, the people of this country find themselves increasingly impoverished as their rents go up, as the prices of the (land under) the homes they want to buy go up, and as the prices of all goods and services (produced on ever-more-expensive land and natural resources) increase too.

We invite all Guardian readers who want some clear and fundamental economic answers, presented in a friendly and open atmosphere, to come study with the Henry George School.

THE TRUTH FAIRY

We would like to respond to the letters about Burton Wolfe's great reportage on the monopoly hoax which took us years to uncover.

What got us about the Quakers and the many others who played the folk game was their honesty — none of them sought to cash in on fraudulently obtained patent monopolies. Even Finance, the first monopoly game sold commercially and successfully, made no patent claims. Darrow himself, the man who copied the game, did not apply for a patent till after he got together with Parker Brothers. (Patent applicants take a solemn oath that they are the original inventors.)

Ms. Spivek is right when she writes that sex is irrelevant to the story. True, the inventor of monopoly was a woman who was conned by industry giants — but so were lots of men. Actually, we were always impressed by people like Ruth Raiford, who built an impressive career as a stockbroker after her husband died, or Dan Layman, who became a successful movie cartoonist and advertising man. They did it without recourse to hoaxes.

Captain Lobo, whom the story inspired to manly expletives referring to both excretory functions, complains that Anti-Monopoly is only a "cheap imitation" of Monopoly. Admittedly, there are lots of such imitations around, but these are mostly put out by the giant companies which apparently operate on the principle that anything can be sold as long as enough money is put into hawking it over TV. Anti-Monopoly, though, is a uniquely played, patented game — and patents are only granted for original inventions which are not obvious developments of previous works.

But Lobo does draw blood when he arraigns us of being the kind of people who tell their children there is no Santa Claus. We try to make up for it, though, by teaching them about the truth fairy.

Will they "hang tough" on Mel Swig and Yerba Buena?

Mayor George Moscone's Select Committee on Yerba Buena Center faces the first major test of its credibility this week when the committee decides whether to immediately approve plans for the Melvin Swig/Lyman Jee "nonprofit" corporation sports arena to be built in YBC.

Moscone appointed the 17-person select committee last month to replan YBC, in an attempt to obtain broad-based agreement on exactly what should be developed in the 87-acre redevelopment area. The committee's policy so far has been to hold off approving any individual projects while they draw up their recommendations on a total plan for the area, which are due August 1.

But on May 8, Mel Swig, with Sup. Ron Pelosi in tow, came before the committee to try to pressure them into exempting the sports arena from that policy and giving the arena an immediate go-ahead.

"I ask you to make a very quick decision — and when I say quickly, I mean within the next few days — that you will allow us to proceed," Swig told the committee. "Please give us an answer within the next week." Swig, who recently purchased the franchise to the California Seals professional ice hockey team on the expectation the team would play in the arena, told the committee that he had "only a very limited amount of time left" before he would have to consider selling the Seals.

Sup. Pelosi, who's quiet as a sphinx on most political issues, suddenly found his tongue and strongly supported Swig. "I want to express very concisely what the position of the city and county is" on the arena, Pelosi modestly told the committee. Pelosi pointed out that the supervisors and Mayor Alioto had given Swig the green light last year and indicated that since the committee members were not elected officials, they would do well to approve the arena project posthaste: "If you will not take action, you will have killed the project."

There are arguments to be made in favor of the arena. It could very likely bring the world champion Golden State Warriors basketball team back to San Francisco from Oakland; and it would provide some construction jobs, concessions and a small number of permanent jobs at the arena itself. If Swig's projected figures pan out and two to three million people a year attend sports and entertainment events at the arena, it also could mean an influx of new money into the city.

But, on balance, there are more reasons for the YBC committee not to approve the sports arena, many of which were raised by committee members themselves in questions they put to Swig and Pelosi.

► The quasi-legal financing plan. Although Swig's nonprofit corporation would theoretically pay off construction bonds with revenues from gate receipts, and although the resolution which the supervisors approved exempts the city from any obligation in guaranteeing the bonds, SF could very well get stuck if the arena project goes belly up, or if Swig's rosy revenue projections are too optimistic. Whether the city has a legal obligation to step in if the arena runs into money troubles, the city has a very real practical obligation to do so: if the nonprofit revenue bonds aren't paid off, the city's AAA bond rating would be threatened. Sup. Pelosi, who's dealt with municipal bonds for years at the Dean Witter investment company, admitted this much under questioning by John Jacobs of SPUR, a member of the YBC committee. Pelosi said "A case could be made for putting $25,000 or $100,000 into the arena [if it got into financial trouble]. If the trade-off for that is preserving the city's bond rating, I think it would be worthwhile."

► The Swig/Jee interests will make a private profit at public risk, if not at public expense. Swig told the committee last week, "This is not nonprofit as far as I'm concerned." Swig and Jee will receive the land for the arena through leasing arrangements at an enormous saving: their cost for some of the most valuable real estate in the city would be only about $13 a square foot, according to Arthur Evans, executive director of the Redevelopment Agency. Also, the income to the city from the arena would be only $300,000 a year in possessory interest tax, according to Swig. Just one year ago, when the Redevelopment Agency was choosing an arena developer, the Agency had two offers (one by Lyman Jee himself) to buy the land outright. The estimated annual return to the city for these privately financed arenas: $1 million a year.

► Approval of the arena now would greatly limit the YBC committee's options in redesigning the whole project. Although Sup. Pelosi argued that Swig and Jee need only three acres of land, the arena's planned location — at Third and Howard Streets — is part of the crucial Central Blocks of the YBC area. Approval of the arena would probably knock out of contention other, equally worthwhile proposals for the Central Blocks like the "Tivoli Gardens" proposal by Richard Gryziec, a fascinating possibility that could give the city a 20-acre park, several million dollars in income and 2,000 full-time jobs according to Gryziec's preliminary figures.

► There are serious questions whether Swig's proposed economic figures would pan out. Last year, when the arena came before the SF Board of Supervisors, the Citizens' Committee on Yerba Buena, raised several questions about the number of events Swig was counting on and the amount of money they would bring in. Swig dismissed these questions last week by saying he had developed a new economic feasibility study. But he grew quite testy when Mike Davis of the YBC select committee asked him to furnish the committee with copies of the new report. Swig said there was no reason for the committee to see the new report!

► Most important of all, the YBC committee's credibility will be severely damaged if they cave into pressure to railroad through the arena, before the committee completes its job of redoing the whole YBC area. The original YBC plan ran into a flurry of lawsuits and, ultimately a dead end, precisely because plans for the area were made by powerful political and economic interests in town like Alioto, the Swigs and the Redevelopment Agency without allowing public input into the planning process. Moscone's committee is a chance to have such public input, and if the committee gets buffaloed into endorsing the arena now, they will become mere window dressing for more of the same old thing.

The YBC select committee will take up the question of the sports arena on Thursday, May 13, at 5 pm at 939 Ellis St., SF. The public is invited. —Jerry Roberts

East Bay crime computer

New link for the FBI?

The FBI, alleged by the House and Senate Intelligence Committees to have misused computerized criminal intelligence systems in some of its COINTELPRO and internal security operations, may soon link up with a crime computer system in Alameda County. FBI Special Agent Charles Bates has asked the Alameda County Criminal Justice Information System board (ALCO-CJIS) to let the FBI have its own terminal on CORPUS (Criminal Oriented Record Processing Utility System), a move which would give the bureau direct access to crime files held by 17 different law enforcement agencies in the county.

CORPUS contains data on all adults who are suspected, arrested, charged, convicted or acquitted in Alameda County criminal cases. Law enforcement officers consider CORPUS a comprehensive tool for crime fighting and the system has terminals in all county public safety offices, including city police forces, the DA's office and special jurisdictions such as BART and the East Bay Park Police.

The FBI already has indirect access to CORPUS through law enforcement agencies that subscribe to the system. Should the bureau want information on a criminal who was charged or arrested in the county, it can ask the sheriff's office or the DA for the information. No FBI request has ever been turned down by a CORPUS agency.

But the bureau isn't satisfied with the indirect approach and would prefer its own computer terminal for direct access. Charles Bates, head of the FBI office in SF, asked ALCO-

CJIS for his own CORPUS terminal in early April, and the board met April 22 to consider his request.

Some members of the ALCO-CJIS board strongly opposed letting the FBI have its own CORPUS hookup. Deputy DA Don Ingraham opposed giving the bureau direct access because, "Once we let the FBI have a link, what's to stop the IRS or the State Department of Fish and Game from asking us for a terminal? We'd be bound to let them have one."

Lee Hague, staff director for the CORPUS system, raised a similar question: "What guarantee do we have that the FBI will be willing to follow CORPUS rules and regulations like any other subscriber to the system? I think we'd have some trouble forcing them to do it."

Perhaps of more serious concern was the possibility FBI agents might abuse the system by using it for "fishing expeditions" against suspected radicals or for selective harassment of people because of their political beliefs. Connie Hosemann, a "public" member of the ALCO-CJIS board (one who doesn't represent a law enforcement agency), told her colleagues, "I have reservations about even giving the FBI information from the system, let alone giving them the ability to put anything into it or take anything out of it they want."

The question is, what action will it take? Despite the opposition voiced on April 22, only six members of the 20-member ALCO-CJIS board actually took a position on the question. The majority of members are police officers or law enforcement officials who are less critical of the FBI than the public members — and might accept a broader definition of "legitimate criminal investigation." The chances are good that when May 19 rolls around, Bates may get his new computer link.

People's politics . . .

On May 6, the Assembly Finance, Insurance, and Commerce Committee passed out a bill drafted by Assemblyman Louis Papan (D-San Mateo) that will enable the State Superintendent of Banks to examine and regulate bank holding companies like those of the Bank of America, Security National and Crocker National. Currently the state has no such authority and cannot even require bank holding companies to issue reports on their financial condition to show they are solvent. Papan's measure — which is strongly opposed by powerful lobbyists from the California Bankers Association — would allow the State Superintendent of Banks to require financial reports or state examinations of holding companies set up by both national and state chartered banks. It is currently before the Assembly Ways and Means Committee. Let Ways and Means Chairman Dan Boatwright (D-Concord) know how you feel about the measure and contact any of the following Bay Area Assemblymen on the Committee: Victor Kalvo (D-Mountain View), John Foran (D-SF), John Miller (D-Oakland), Alister McAllister (D-San Jose) or John Vasconcellos (D-San Jose). Write them c/o the State Capitol, Sacramento 95814, or call their local offices. . . .

Protest the imprisonment of Chilean revolutionary Mario Munoz and thousands of other political prisoners in Argentina since the junta took power there in March. Join a rally, 11 am, Mon/17, at the Argentine embassy, 870 Market St., SF (835-1535). . . .

Bill Flynn, a former engineer for the Bay Area Air Pollution Control Board, has severely criticized the board for doing an inadequate job of watchdogging the pollution output of large Bay Area factories and firms. The board will review Flynn's charges at its headquarters, 939 Ellis St., SF, at 9:30 am, Thursday and Friday, May 13 and 14 (771-6000). . . . The Network Coffee House will present speakers from both sides of the Nuclear Safeguards controversy, 1036 Bush St., SF (776-2722). Speakers from No on 15 will give a talk Thur/20, and speakers from Californians for Nuclear Safeguards will rap Fri/21. Admission is free. . . . The American Issues Forum will present Life, Liberty and the Pursuit of Happiness, a graphic display "depicting the California dream image," every day from Tues/18 through Mon/24, North Point Theater, 2290 Powell St. and Sunset Branch Library, 1305 18th St., SF.

Find out how to share your job or be hired as half of a pair of workers: "New Ways to Work," an organization seeking alternatives to the five-day, 40-hour week grind, has been interviewing employers in private industry and civil service and has developed some novel ideas on how to restructure the workplace. The group is having a free workshop at the SF YWCA, 620 Sutter St., 5:30-7 pm, Wed/21. . . . San Franciscans for District Elections has printed copies of the petition initiative to be circulated to get district elections on the November ballot. The group needs to collect 35,000 signatures by August in order to qualify the measure. For petitions or more information, call 431-9892. . . . The Friends of 1732 Committee, a group working for the release of Americans held in foreign jails, will demonstrate in support of the more than 500 Americans now in Mexican jails on Fri/14, 11 am-2 pm at the Mexican Consulate, 870 Market St., SF (941-1732).

The Oceanview Committee goes free! On May 6, Deputy Alameda County DA Alex Selvin dropped all charges against the six Oceanview Committee defendants charged with obstructing a Berkeley street when the city's redevelopment agency moved a house to make way for the West Berkeley Industrial Park boondoggle. The defendants said they hoped to politicize their trial and "prosecute the city for violating its own Neighborhood Preservation Ordinance" in moving the house in the first place, but the DA's office refused to let them use the courtroom as a political pulpit: in asking that all charges be dropped, Selvin said, "We can't afford the luxury of a three-week trial." . . . The East Bay Socialist School is presenting a forum on work in America featuring the slide show "We Are Not Happy Robots," at 8 pm, Fri/14, 6025 Shattuck St., Oakland. A 50¢ donation is asked, and childcare will be provided free (652-1756). . . . Joint benefit for the American Indian Movement (AIM) and the Oceanview Committee, 8 pm, Thur/13, at La Pena, 3105 Shattuck, Berkeley. # How the Chron covers KRON-FM

The San Francisco Chronicle sold its KRON-FM radio station to the Mormon Church for $2.85 million on April 27.

This was the biggest Bay Area media deal of the year, and it was written up in the May 3 issue of Broadcasting magazine, the national journal of the industry published in Washington, D.C. but the story didn't make it from KRON headquarters at 1001 Van Ness Ave. across town to the Chronicle/Examiner newspapers at 5th and Mission.

In fact, not a word about the local transaction has appeared in either paper since a small story in the May 5, 1975, Examiner announcing the church's offer to buy the FM station.

Phillip Peterson, the FCC attorney who handled the case, told me the sale should become final by early July. The Chronicle Broadcasting Company, a subsidiary of the SF Chronicle that also owns KRON-TV, is to transfer title to Bay Area Broadcasting, Inc., a wholly owned subsidiary of Bonneville International Corporation, which in turn is a wholly owned corporation of Deseret Management Corporation in Salt Lake City, Utah. Deseret is a business front for the Corporation of the President of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints (Mormons).

The Mormon Church already has a far-flung network of radio and television stations around the country. In Salt Lake City the church operates KSL-TV, KSL-AM and KSL-FM; in New York it owns WRFM radio, and in Seattle, Washington, it owns three stations: KIRO radio, KSEA-FM and KIRO-TV. The church operates KMBR-FM in Kansas City, Missouri, and WCLR-FM in Skokie, Illinois, and it has three radio stations in California: KBRT in Avalon, KBID in Los Angeles and, now, KRON-FM.

The sale went through almost with out a hitch. The only opposition was from the Community Coalition for Media Change, a Berkeley-based media lobby headed by Marcus Garvey Wilcher. Peterson told me the Coalition had opposed the sale because it felt that KRON's affirmative action program was already unsatisfactory, and, given that the Mormon Church has no leadership positions for women or minority group members, the Coalition feared equal opportunity hiring and promotions would be likely to decrease under the new owners.

"We listened to their complaints and checked out what they said, but we didn't find their objections strong enough to disapprove the sale," Peterson said.

"A community group in Seattle, Washington, compiled evidence that there was blatant racism at one of the broadcast outlets the Mormons own up there," Wilcher said. "There are no black people working at KRON-FM now. That's bad enough, but with the Mormons running the station I don't see how there will be any way of breaking that up."

I couldn't reach any of the parties to the deal for comment on the sale or on when the Mormons would take over the operation of the station. KRON-FM's general manager, Pep Cooley, was out of the office when I phoned and hadn't returned my call at press time. Moreover, there is no listing in the SF or Oakland telephone directory for "Bay Area Broadcasting, Inc." the Mormon Church front group that engineered the deal.

Why didn't the Chronicle do a story on a $2.85 million transaction involving one of its own subsidiaries? I called to ask Steve Gavin, the Chronicle's city editor, but he was just heading into a meeting and referred me to Gordon Pates, the Chronicle's managing editor. I was informed by Pates's secretary that "Mr. Pates doesn't speak to anyone from the Bay Guardian."

The Puerto Rican contingent in the Cinco de Mayo parade through the Mission marched for Puerto Rican independence, May 9.

Well, what about the Examiner? I asked Examiner City Editor Bill Burkhardt why they hadn't done a story on the FCC's approval of the sale. "I wouldn't know," Burkhardt told me. "This is the first I've heard about it." And KRON? Nothing on the air, no statements for the Guardian and no press releases for the public.

P.S.: Interesting sidelight: The Chronicle/Examiner's refusal to run this simple story only further substantiates two of the major charges against the Chronicle/KRON in the FCC hearings on the renewal of its broadcast license:

(1) that the Chronicle, with its broadcast holdings and its monopoly merger relationship with the Examiner, represents a dangerous media monopoly in San Francisco; (2) that the Chronicle often manipulates its broadcast and newspaper interests to the advantage of the other. (See "KRONic Concentration," Nicholas Johnson's last word on monopoly journalism, Guardian 5/24/75.) —Bill Wallace

Primary insightems

Although the endorsing convention of the SF Labor Council is supposedly a democratic, if somewhat secret, affair, and the recommendations of the Executive Committee to the Convention are very hush-hush, the Council's April 14 endorsements of John Foran in the 6th state senate race and Milton Marks in the 5th senate seat weren't exactly a big surprise: at the Labor Council's candidates night on March 29, council president Joe Belardi let Foran and Marks each talk for 15 minutes at the beginning of the program and then limited everyone else to five minutes. When Marks finished talking, Belardi told him, "Your record is very good, and I'm sure when we consider it, you'll get an endorsement." At the conclusion of Foran's speech, Belardi predicted "I see you winning an endorsement." Quelle clairvoyance!

Fred Furth, candidate for SF's 5th Senatorial District, has been endorsed by eight SF Democratic clubs, including the Hastings Law School, Alice B. Toklas, Greater Mission and Reform Democratic Clubs. Furth will appear at a cocktail party and dance at California Hall, 8 pm, Sat/15. One of Furth's opponents in the race, Bob Mendelsohn, will appear at a Wine and Cheese tasting party 5:30 pm, Fri/21, at the 63 Bluxome Gallery between 4th and 5th Streets in SF. . . .

12th Assembly District candidate Tom Bates will appear at a reception at 3202 Claremont Blvd., Berkeley, 5 pm, Sat/15. Donation is $10 (655-2293). Bates has been endorsed by the Tom Paine Democratic Club, the Greater Oakland Montclair Democratic Club and the Alameda County Democratic Lawyers Club. . . . Tom Dove, candidate for the 12th Assembly District, was endorsed May 7 by John Maher, President of the Delancey Street Foundation. . . . Humor about women's experiences will be the topic of Ivy Bottini, feminist comedian, at an appearance for 12th Assembly District candidate Barbara Macnab, 2267 Telegraph Ave., Oakland, 8 pm, Thur/13.

Follow that story!

Big Sister (3/12/76): Like Lazarus, ALES, Alameda County's proposed criminal intelligence computer system, has risen from the dead. On April 24, the Alameda County Regional Criminal Justice Planning Board voted to pump $475,000 into the flagging program to keep it alive after the Oakland and Berkeley Police Departments had both initially backed out of the project. (The Oakland PD later reconsidered and decided to stick with ALES.)

ALES (pronounced "Alice") will link up 17 different computers serving 19 law enforcement agencies in Alameda County.

Civil libertarians such as Albany Mayor Mike Gleason and Berkeley Police Review Commissioner Diane Schroerluke and the ACLU's Amitai Schwartz say the system is another Big Brother attack on constitutional freedoms.

Cronyism at BART

On May 3, BART got a new $32,000-a-year Director of Personnel and Community Development: Ernie Howard, a Berkeley businessman and long-time political ally of Mayor Warren Widener and the Berkeley City Councilman Henry Ramsey. Bay Area residents learned of the appointment through a BART press release — if they learned of it at all: the Chron/Ex ignored the story and the Oakland Tribune retreaded the press release and ran it under Harre Demoro's byline. The Berkeley Gazette ran the press release verbatim, as is its practice.

What the press release says is that Howard is a former President of Social Dynamics Incorporated, a Berkeley firm that provides "guidance to both public and private agencies in the area of health, education, employment, training, business management and research services," and formerly worked in the Berkeley City Manager's office, the Bay Area Social Planning Council and the Hunters Point-Bayview Youth Opportunities Council.

What it didn't say is that Howard was nearly appointed to the post of Berkeley City Manager in 1974 in a political deal so odoriferous that it embarrassed some of Widener's political allies.

Here's what happened: Howard has supported Warren Widener and Henry Ramsey since the Sixties when they all worked together in Social Dynamics, Howard's firm. Widener ran for city council in April 1968, and Mayor in April 1971, both times with Howard's financial support and endorsement.

Ramsey also supported Widener in 1968 and 1971, and Widener rewarded him with a seat on the Berkeley Redevelopment Agency, a job Ramsey used to get elected to the Berkeley City Council in April 1973 as a member of Widener's Berkeley Four slate.

Once Widener and Ramsey were both safely in office, they turned to important city business — such as selecting a new City Manager to replace Bill Hanley, who left Berkeley in December 1971, for a job as City Manager of Hayward.

The Berkeley City Council spent thousands of dollars advertising that it was looking for a new chief administrator and contacted hundreds of city managers across the country trying to find the best person for the job. However, when the dust cleared in early 1974, the selection had been narrowed to two people: John Taylor, City Manager of Kansas City, Missouri, and — surprise — Ernie Howard of Berkeley.

The coincidence was a little hard to choke down — even for Widener's closest political friends. When the selection was made on Jan. 8, 1974, both Widener and Ramsey felt constrained, against voting for Howard because their past association with him was so obvious, and Taylor became city manager almost by default.

So now Howard joins BART at $32,000, having failed to obtain the $40,000-a-year appointment as Berkeley's city manager. His new duties will include training BART employees, policing the transit system's affirmative action and equal opportunity employment provisions and monitoring contracts to make sure they are in accordance with BART hiring practices and state and federal laws.

If Howard's old crony, Warren Widener, fails to unseat John Miller in his bid for the state Assembly June 8, maybe Howard can fix him up with a good job writing those information-packed BART press releases.

How PG&E 'lowers' rates

The April edition of PG&E Progress, which is sent to all customers of the local gas and electricity monopoly, trumpets that Pacific Gas & Electric Company has the second lowest rates among the nation's 25 largest cities. That's one way of looking at PG&E's progress. But, as Fiorello LaGuardia, the most colorful 20th century Mayor of New York, once observed, "You can use statistics to lie for any side."

Here's a different set of statistics that is more meaningful to the people of northern California: All cities over 2,500 population throughout Oregon and Washington have lower electricity rates than those PG&E charges its customers. To find any higher rates on the West Coast, you have to go south past PG&E territory to areas of California serviced by the Southern California Edison Co.

These figures are contained in a Federal Power Commission report entitled "Typical Electric Bills — 1975." They are published in the Bay Guardian now to offset the propaganda appearing in the April 1976 edition of PG&E Progress, which is paid for by adding its cost to gas and electric rates.

Headlined "PG&E rates still among the lowest, study shows," the article states:

"PG&E rates remain among the lowest in the nation, despite inflation and the high costs of fuel which have forced almost all utility rates upward.

"This is indicated in a recent PG&E study of typical bills in the nation's 25 largest cities."

These results obtained by PG&E in its own private study coincide with figures available from the State Public Utilities Commission. In addition to confirming what the Bay Guardian has always stated about municipally owned utilities being cheaper than privately owned utilities, they present a distorted picture of comparative rates — for the following reasons:

► They show only residential rates. Commercial rates for some of the cities shown are consistently lower than PG&E's. In Los Angeles, for example, commercial rates are lower than in SF.

► By confining its report to the 25 biggest cities, PG&E eliminates the all-important regional factor. In the region of PG&E's operations, the West Coast, it is out-operated by the big privately owned utilities in Oregon and Washington: the Portland General Electric Co. and Washington Water Power Co.

► More than half of the cities over 2,500 population in California are serviced by PG&E. The electricity rates for all of them are higher than for any of the 175 Oregon and Washington cities surveyed by the Federal Power Commission. This shows PG&E rates are higher in small cities as well as big ones.

► PG&E's article makes it appear the company gives its customers low rates through love or efficiency. In fact, PG&E's rates are lower than those of other big cities such as New York or Chicago only because the company has been given access to cheap federal,

Memo of the Week

Dear Customer:

For more than forty years, Sunset Scavenger Company has been salvaging and recycling newspapers. This program has directly benefited the ratepayer because the resulting income has been used to offset some of the applicable refuse collection expense.

With landfill expenses soaring, it is to every customer's overall advantage to make an effort to reduce the amount of "weight" that must be disposed. Coupled with the need for continued efforts towards the preservation of our natural resources, we again request your cooperation in presorting your newsprint for this important program.

Although your participation has been good, there has been an effort by unauthorized individuals to literally "steal" your bundled newsprint before the Sunset Scavenger crew arrives to pick it up.

These "incidents of theft" usually take place late at night when the garbage container is placed outside the house for collection, exposed to street traffic with the bundled newsprint usually stored on top of the container in plain view.

We request that any customer who does in fact have his container placed outside in view of the street on collection day, and desires to participate in the newsprint program, to please make an effort to conceal the bundled paper. We suggest one of the following: place the bundle "behind" the container; place the bundle of paper in a "cardboard box"; bring the newsprint out just before the collection vehicle arrives.

We recognize that this extra effort may be an additional inconvenience for you. Every pound of newsprint stolen benefits only the person who is stealing it, and not the person who should receive the benefit, which is you the customer.

SUNSET SCAVENGER COMPANY

state and municipally owned power sources, partly in violation of the 1912 Raker Act. But for this discriminatory and partly illegal treatment accorded PG&E by federal, state and municipal governments, PG&E's rates would be among the highest for any big city.

I asked Stan Turnbull, editor of PG&E Progress, why PG&E had bothered to conduct its own study in the first place, since the statistics used are available from public sources. He said it was because the Public Utilities Commission and the Federal Power Commission conduct only one study a year, it is done on the basis of a fiscal year that does not end till June, and PG&E wanted the latest results right now.

"Well, people may feel that the rates here are getting to be the highest in the country, and we wanted to show them this is not so, that we're still among the lowest."

You bet that's what PG&E wanted to show. Why? Because in 1975 the PUC approved $737.4 million in increases for PG&E that raised the average homeowner's gas and electricity bill from $25.95 to $30.32 a month; and now PG&E is asking the PUC to approve a $63.5 million annual increase in natural gas rates, another $456.8 million increase to cover operating expenses and a boost in its profit return from 8.65 to 10.1 per cent, and a $70 million increase in electricity rates.

Now watch PG&E pour out the propaganda about how beneficently the privately owned monopoly of public power treats its customers.

City strike

What else will the supervisors "hang tough" on?

The SF Supervisors have just put the city through a 38-day strike by "hang-tough" on $5.5 million worth of pay cuts for city crafts workers.

The question now is will the supervisors "hang tough" on Mel Swig's sports arena in Yerba Buena, on the damming of the Tuolumne River, on a sweetheart deal for the Giants at Candlestick, on the Manhattanization schemes that are the real, ongoing causes of the city's budget crises.

It is one thing for the supervisors to draw the line at the charter extravagances granted the crafts, but it is quite another for them to continue the destructive policies of Manhattanization (which require lots of city services and lots of city workers) and further perpetuate the fiscal crises they invoked to "hang tough" during the strike.

For starters, the "hang tough" supervisors can begin to hold down the cost of municipal government by voting against the $24 million "nonprofit" corporation scheme for a sports arena in Yerba Buena Center if and when sports arena developers Melvin Swig and Lyman Jee come back to the Board for further approval of their plans (see accompanying story).

The "hang tough" supervisors can approve on May 17 the recommendation of the Airport Select Committee that the Airport Commission be required to complete the expansion of the airport with the amount of money already approved for that horror.

The "hang tough" supervisors can begin taking a strong and vocal position against the city's putting up another dime for the $450 million boondoggle to dam the Tuolumne River for the benefit of PG&E and the valley cities of Turlock and Modesto and for the benefit of airline tenants at an expanded airport.

The "hang tough" supervisors can, on Tuolumne and scores of other such raise-the-bonded-indebtedness-and-deplete-the-city-services votes, begin to act on the fact that the city's bonded indebtedness is some $689 million and that the city now has the third highest per capita bonded indebtedness for US cities.

The "hang tough" supervisors can approve a feasibility report for the city to buy PG&E's distribution system, provide cheap Hetch Hetchy public power to the city's residences and businesses and provide up to $21 million worth of new revenue to the city every year.

In short, the "hang tough" supervisors stored up lots of political hay over there in the City Hall barns by drawing the line on the crafts, but it would be almost criminal of them to go back to the old policies of pushing the city farther along the road to Manhattanization. Blaming the crafts for our fiscal crisis is like blaming Bart Porter for Watergate.

—Bruce B. Bruggmann/Jerry Roberts

Further notes:

► The five labor members of the 11-person "fact-finding" committee on pay cuts, which was a key element of the strike settlement, should demand to know why the supervisors singled out crafts unions like the laborers, the carpenters and the plumbers for cuts ranging from $1,000 to more than $5,000 annually when they awarded raises to other crafts unions like the painters ranging from $2,400 to nearly $3,000 and the stationary engineers going as high as $4,400, according to data in the Salary Standardization Ordinance.

► Conversations with a number of city workers who recently returned to work indicate there are two schools of thought about what action to take if the taxpayers' lawsuit, which seeks to prevent the supervisors from removing the anti-labor propositions E and K from the ballot, succeeds and the propositions are put back on the ballot.

More than 500 residents of Visitacion Valley turned out to hear SF Police Chief Charles Gain at a community forum on crime organized by the All People's Coalition (APC) at Our Lady at Visitacion Catholic Church on May 6. Best news was Chief Gain's promise that Visitacion Valley would be included as a target neighborhood in the federally funded "Neighborhood Safety Project." Gain's promise culminated three months of work by APC organizers to make their neighborhood one of five eligible for a slice of the $342,000 program. Pictured (left to right): Chief Gain; Anthony Loar, Clarence Fleming, Rita Adrians and June Williams, all of APC; Father Tom Lacey of Our Lady of Visitacion Valley Church. You can contact APC at 239-9050.

Some crafts workers favor an immediate walk-out. Others, however, believe that going back out on strike would insure the passage of E and K; they think the best course of action would be to organize an educational campaign against the propositions and that such a campaign would be successful in pointing out the supervisors' bad faith in coming to a phony settlement. As one member of the laborers put it, "If E and K go back on, the supervisors are gonna look like the assholes for a change."

► Sup. Kopp told the Guardian there were two reasons he decided to vote against the settlement: the addition of Mayor Moscone as the 11th member of the "fact-finding" committee and the broadening of the fact-finding committee's mandate to include not only an examination of Civil Service data on the pay cuts for errors and inaccuracies but also the whole package of wages, hours and working conditions for the crafts.

Since the first ten members of the fact-finding group were split between five labor representatives and five supervisors, Moscone, who lost a lot of influence with labor for his dismal performance during the strike, represents the swing vote. This fact, coupled with the broader mandate of the fact-finding committee, could conceivably mean the fact-finding committee would come back to the supervisors (who have final say on the fact-finding committee's recommendations) with a proposal to restore all or part of the cuts for the crafts.

According to Kopp, such a recommendation would create substantial pressure on the supervisors to restore the cuts, which would make them look pretty silly for prolonging the strike nearly 40 days over the principle of the pay cuts.

This scenario probably won't unfold, however. I ran it by several other supervisors, all of whom said they wouldn't vote to restore the cuts, regardless of the recommendations of the fact-finding committee. Sup. Terry Francois said, "I don't see that as a probability or a possibility. The mayor is clearly aware he's not the man in the middle. He's on the management team."

The boys in

By Bob Levering

No one expects the US military to be transformed in the near future into a haven for gay lovers like the armies of young Greeks, Spartans and Macedonians in the time of Plato and Alexander the Great. But the day may soon be at hand when open gays are officially tolerated in the US Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force — much to the horror of the red-blooded, military-academy-educated, white (and often Southern) males who run the nation's armed forces.

Consider the following recent developments:

► Last month a federal judge in SF told the Navy "to reevaluate its stance regarding homosexual conduct" in an opinion in the case of a 15-year veteran meteorologist the Navy was attempting to discharge for being gay.

► An Army colonel, the commanding officer of a base in Northern California, recently overruled the recommendation of a captain at the same base who had formally requested that an MP, an open lesbian, be discharged because of her gayness.

► More than a dozen gays in all branches of the service have followed the lead of Air Force Sgt. Leonard P. Matlovich, who first revealed his homosexuality to his military superiors a year ago last March thereby launching a legal and political assault on the military's regulations that explicitly prohibit gays or even persons who exhibit "homosexual tendencies" from being in the armed forces.

Most, if not all, of the dozen or so direct challenges to the anti-gay regulations may ultimately fail to keep the individual soldiers or sailors from being discharged. (Some 2,000 to 3,000 others are quietly discharged each year under the same provisions.) But these cases — and the dozens that may be anticipated in the near future — are shaking up the country's new all-volunteer armed forces and, if successful, portend a significant loosening up of restrictions against gays in American society in general.

Ironically, the rash of cases of open defiance by gays is in many ways attributable to the nature of the country's post-Vietnam military services.

The advent of the all-volunteer armed forces — a result of a combination of pressures from anti-Vietnam war activists, then-President Nixon and libertarian conservatives like Sen. Barry Goldwater — meant the military had to overhaul its public image to garner new recruits. The Pentagon launched a massive advertising campaign with promises of higher pay (an E-1 recruit received $88/month in 1968, $361/month today), travel, free training and education and better, less regimented living conditions.

At the same time, the military began recruiting more women. In 1972, only 1.8% of all members of the armed forces were women; in 1974, women made up 14% of new recruits. Also, the military conducted some highly publicized experiments with coed barracks. In short, the military made a concentrated PR effort to make the armed forces appear as an attractive alternative to America's young, many of whom were turned off by the services' bad record from the Vietnam fiasco.

Despite the expensive efforts to appeal to the "now generation," the Pentagon had trouble filling up the ranks with new recruits until mid-1974 when the economy took a tailspin. With unemployment rates skyrocketing, the military had less trouble drawing in new recruits for one of the few paying opportunities around.

Typical of many of the new recruits is Specialist 4 Katherine Isheim, a college graduate who was living with a woman lover when she enlisted in the Army in 1974. "I was broke," Isheim told me, explaining that she and her lover decided her joining the Army was the easiest way to solve their economic problems at the time.

Sgt. Miriam Ben Shalom had similar reasons for signing up with the Army Reserves while she attended the University of Wisconsin. "It's a good part-time job," Ben Shalom told me. "I understand my gay brothers and sisters who say the military's an imperialistic system — whatever that means — but for people who need a job, it's better than to stay on the streets and hustle." At the time she entered the Army, Ben Shalom was a public spokesperson for the Gay Peoples' Union in Milwaukee. When she enlisted, she indicated on her application forms that she belonged to that group and to a lesbian organization (a fact that may be crucial to her legal defense in the Army's discharge proceedings against her).

PFC "Richard Walker" (who asked that his real name not be used) joined the Marines because of the education benefits he could receive from a three-year hitch. Like other new gay recruits, Private Walker found a thriving though hidden gay subculture in the military. After his training at the Marines' infamous boot camp at Parris Island, South Carolina ("I'm proud of making it through there," Walker said), he was sent to a Marine base in Southern California where he found several gay bars frequented almost exclusively by military personnel near the bases. "There's a gay bar less than 100 yards from the NTC [Naval Training Center] gate in San Diego," Walker told me.

Despite the Marines' "macho" image (which he calls "phony"), Walker has met several gay officers and gay gunnery sergeants as well as gay enlisted men in the Marines. "I've made it with more damned guys in the Marine Corps than with guys on the street," he boasts. Walker reports that "no gay bars are off limits in San Diego to the military," but he told me of the Capri bar in Oceanside, which Camp Pendleton authorities declared off limits last summer.

Like Isheim, Ben Shalom and other open gays interviewed by the Guardian, Walker found virtually no difficulties in relations with nongay military people. Most of the others they have contact with considered their occupation in the Armed Forces as a "job," and as such were generally tolerant of the off-duty personal habits or preferences of their coworkers. Thus, the Pentagon's expensive recruiting campaign to convince young people that military service is just another job appears to be working, if not with the intended results.

However, the military's gay recruits have met an inflexible Department of Defense policy regarding gays. John Becher of the DoD's public information office in Washington explained the policy to me in these terms: "The presence [of homosexuals] would seriously impair discipline, good order, morale and security" within the military. Moreover, Becher says the Pentagon feels "an obligation and responsibility" to provide young people entering the service with "the most wholesome and healthful environment possible," which it feels is inconsistent with the presence of gays. In fact, the DoD goes so far as to claim keeping gays out of the military is "absolutely essential to the effectiveness" of the armed forces of the United States.

The Pentagon's official posture regarding gays appears ludicrous in light of the prevalence of homosexuality in the military. Two Kinsey Institute researchers, for instance, estimated in 1971 that the percentage of gays in the military is approximately the same as in civilian society. According to an article by Andrew Kopkind in New Times, defense lawyers and experts in the current legal cases use the standard estimate of 10% gay, in and out of uniform. These figures suggest that the dozen or so gays who are currently challenging the Pentagon and the estimated 2,000 to 3,000 gays who are quietly mustered out each year represent merely the tip of the iceberg.

The day may soon be at hand when open gays are officially tolerated in the US Army, Navy, Marines and Air Force

Says the Pentagon, 'The presence of homosexuals would seriously impair discipline, good order, morale and security within the military.'

What's new is the gay liberation movement, which marks the inception of its most recent militant phase with the Stonewall riots of 1969 when gays protested the violent police raid on a New York City gay bar.

Since that time, gays have won significant civil rights gains despite the fact, as Time magazine points out, "Homosexuals in the US face an array of penalties more severe than in any Western nation outside the Communist bloc." To cite some of the gains: twelve states, including California, have eliminated laws against sodomy; 22 cities, including San Francisco, have passed laws related to sexual freedom and antidiscrimination; major corporations, such as AT&T, B of A, IBM, NBC and Honeywell, claim to hire homosexuals as equal opportunity employers; and the American Psychiatric Association voted two years ago to stop labeling gays as mentally ill. Even more to the point, the Federal Civil Service Commission decided last July that gays should no longer be considered as unfit for public service (which covers some 90% of the country's 2.6 million federal civilian employees).

Gays in the military have had some small successes in the past year. Spec. 4 Isheim was investigated by the Army's Criminal Investigation Division last summer after her superiors were told explicitly she was a lesbian, a fact she never denied. Captain Mercer Darden, her superior officer, recommended she be discharged based on the CID report, but on March 7, 1976, Col. Robert Hawk, the commanding officer of the Sierra Army Depot in Herlong, Calif., overruled the captain, saying there was insufficient evidence to warrant her dismissal from the service (a remarkable position considering Isheim's up-front lesbianism).

In mid-April, a SF federal judge noted the incongruity of the Pentagon's adamant position against gays in a ruling on the Navy's attempt to discharge Petty Officer First Class Dennis R. Beller, a 15-year veteran meteorologist stationed in Monterey. Though ruling against Beller's attempt to gain a preliminary injunction against the Navy's discharge efforts, US District Judge George Harris wrote, "The Navy would do well to reevaluate its stance regarding homosexual conduct in the same manner that other governmental concerns have."

Judge Harris concluded, "The Navy does itself and the public little good by removing an experienced and able serviceman such as [Beller] from its ranks, and it should seriously consider what interest is furthered by its decision to do so."

The Navy might also ask itself what interest is served by its recent discharge of Commander Gary Hess, a 25-year veteran of the Naval Reserves, whose case is being fought in federal courts by SF attorney John Vaisey. Hess, who told me he stands to lose up to $100,000 over the years in retirement benefits if his discharge is upheld, has been elected twice (once running as an open gay candidate) to the Santa Barbara County Board of Education. Hess says that if the people of his home town trust him with the education of their young children, he fails to understand how the Navy can contend he somehow represents a threat to others in the Navy (or, to quote the Pentagon's Belcher, how Hess would disrupt a "wholesome and healthful environment").

Furthermore, Hess says, "I have a right to be in the military. I am a citizen of this country. As a citizen in a free country I should be able to serve in the armed forces, like I have the right to serve on the school board."

'The Cattle Mutilations'

By Burton H. Wolfe

mutilate [verb] 1. to deprive a person or animal of a limb or other essential part. mutilation [noun].

— The Random House Dictionary
of the English Language

It began as a hoax perpetrated by an astrologer and radio program host, spread to newspapers throughout the Midwest, made national magazines such as Saga and Esquire in November and December 1975, popped up as the Berkeley Barb's cover story Feb. 20 and was published in the Examiner April 19 under the headline "The great mutilation mystery."

You probably know the story by now: Cattle are found on the range with eyes plucked out, genitals severed, ears chopped off and blood drained. On occasion it is reported there are no tracks around the dead cattle. Also on occasion it is reported that helicopters were seen hovering above the cattle.

Before the "mutilation" hoax got started, nobody attributed anything sinister, spooky or supernatural to such occurrences. Ever since cattle existed they have died and been preyed on by buzzards, foxes and other predators that pluck eyes and sever various body parts treated as delicacies. Blood is drained into body cavities. Helicopters are used by federal and state government agencies for surveys of cattle herds.

Ranchers and farmers accepted all this as routine until Minnesota astrologer Dan Fry, host of a radio program called "Cosmic Age," announced two years ago that cattle were being mutilated either by some weird Satanic cult or supernatural creatures arriving on the range in UFOs. Suddenly, farmers in Minnesota accustomed to finding dead cows with parts severed by predators began attributing the scavengings to Satanists and UFO creatures. Through the mass communications media, including the Associated Press and such esteemed newspapers as the Houston Post, the story was disseminated to millions of people in hundreds of Midwestern cities. Reporters began to vie with each other for the most sensationalized version of how mysterious creatures from UFOs or stealthy night figures from Satanic cults were mutilating cattle.

Alarmed by the results, astrologer Dan Fry appeared on radio and television talk shows in an effort to abort his prank before the press created still more mass hysteria with it.

"Man, there weren't any cattle mutilations," Fry explained in a typical appearance on a Texas television talk show in March 1975. "I just started these rumors as a joke."

Meanwhile, police and state government agencies were conducting their own investigations of the "700 cattle mutilations" that have "spread across the Midwest since 1967," according to Associated Press and various newspapers and magazines. The most thorough investigation was undertaken by a task force organized at the behest of Oklahoma Gov. David L. Boren.

It was made up of state troopers, sheriffs, detectives, cattle investigators, government security agents, health inspectors, radiation experts (to cover the UFO angle), veterinarians and wildlife experts. It covered alleged "mutilations" in Minnesota, Nebraska, Colorado, Texas, Oklahoma and other states.

Late in March 1975 the results of the task force's investigations were released in a paper written by Oklahoma Public Safety Commissioner W. Roger Webb:

"Most of the reported deaths of cattle in Oklahoma were due to natural causes. Three animals were found to have died from gunshot wounds and one was killed by a motor vehicle. In several cases cattle had been chased by dogs or other animals and died from exhaustion or injury. Others died from malnutrition, anemia and weather stress . . . The [subsequent] dismemberment or so-called 'mutilation' of the cattle was from scavenger animals."

What, no UFO creatures or Satanists preparing for human sacrifices? No, the task force concluded. That resulted first from hysterics, psychotics and frauds, and then the story was magnified and spread by three letter-writing convicts in the Federal Correctional Institute at Marion, Illinois.

The three convicts convinced some of the least intelligent members of police departments that they had inside information about a group of wealthy, high-placed Satanists who had arranged the whole plot. In fact, authorities found out, the plot existed entirely in the heads of these three convicts.

Once the truth was discovered, officials tried to induce the mass communications media to kill the story. Capt. John Murphy, head of the Texas Department of Public Safety, denounced the convicts' tales, published in newspapers and magazines, as a "pack of lies." Capt. Vern Byler, head of the Nebraska Highway Patrol criminal division, announced an investigation of a hundred phony "mutilations" showed all to be the work of scavenger animals, not "little green men from outer space or any Satanists." Charles Reiter, head of the Minnesota division of criminal investigation, reported anything but scavengings is attributable solely to "rampant rumors."

Rol Kabech, director of criminal investigations for the South Dakota Attorney General, announced that reports of blood drained from animals were "unfounded and initiated by young, inexperienced officers making irresponsible statements." Clarence Duntz, special agent for the Kansas Bureau of Investigation, said scavengings of cattle were converted to a scare story which created "near panic" in Kansas by an irresponsible lawman quoted in equally irresponsible newspapers as stating "the type of person who would mutilate cattle might do the same thing to children."

Newsmen who persisted in believing the Satanist conspiracy tale — even after it was revealed as the concoction of three convicts — suspected some kind of mass coverup (though they never explained who was supposed to be covering up what). These persistent newsmen demanded a technical explanation of why some police officers had stated flatly the severings of limbs could only be caused by human beings using sharp instruments and why blood was drained from some of the animals. So, they got explanations.

Dr. Roger Panciera, veterinary pathologist at Oklahoma State University, explained that the blood drained into natural cavities such as the lungs. Dr. H. A. Hancock, director of the State Veterinary Laboratory at Laramie, Wyoming, explained that buzzards pluck out eyes, and foxes and coyotes bite off body parts, in ways that are indistinguishable from human beings using sharp instruments. He reported extensive tests on the allegedly "mutilated" cattle showed all were the work of nature's scavengers feeding off animals that had died of natural causes.

Hancock described the fox as "a neat little animal" with "awfully sharp teeth" and "a penchant for eating the lips and eyes of dead cattle . . . at first a slit is made, but then when it dries it will develop into a circle which ends up looking like a fine job done with an instrument." As for reports of Satanic cultists removing sex organs, Hancock said this is the work of coyotes, which like to feast on genitalia.

As further proof for skeptical journalists, various state agencies in Texas and South Dakota, and even owners of the dead cattle themselves, conducted experiments out in the fields: Carcasses were placed in areas where they could be observed through binoculars by concealed agents and ranchers. Turkey buzzards, foxes and coyotes fed on the carcasses. Examinations showed the results were identical to those various police officers described to the press as being the work of "human beings with sharp instruments . . . it couldn't have been anything else."

By the summer of 1975 the cattle mutilation story in every last one of its hysterical aspects had been disproved, discredited, debunked a hundred times over — even by newspapers such as the Houston Post that originally rode with the story. Nevertheless, the Associated Press kept disseminating the story, one version wilder than the next, to hundreds of newspapers. Then it appeared in magazines.

In the December 1975 edition of Esquire you will find the whole discredited, refuted cock-and-bull story appearing as "Rippers of the Range" by Alexander Cockburn, who doubles as Village Voice staff writer and Esquire "crime" columnist. Cockburn, outdoing almost everybody else, has the mutilation story tied in with UFO sightings, the Charles Manson clan, "ritual murders in California" (he does not and cannot name any), a "former member of the Church of Satan" (Cockburn neglects to tell his readers the reason this is a former member; he was thrown out of the organization for being so annoying and disruptive), some hokum on a non-existent "Sons of Satan" and a whole list of other stuff that is just about as connected to cattle deaths as infant crib deaths are linked with invasions from Mars.

Cockburn has all that disconnected stuff in his "crime" feature. But Cockburn does not have a single solitary observation of anybody mutilating cattle, an arrest of anybody for it or a photo — or even testimony from anybody — of a single solitary mutilated cow or calf.

And what about the massive investigations by police and medical authorities proving that all the alleged cattle mutilations are the work of predatory animals, not Satanists or UFO creatures?

If Esquire can do it, why not the Berkeley Barb? Especially now that Esquire had provided a California link to the story: Cockburn-described (but unspecified) "ritual murders," and the clan of Charles Manson (who is undoubtedly at this very moment ordering his statewide network of 100,000 secret agents to perpetrate 500,000 mutilations on California ranches in the next two months). So it was that the Feb. 20 edition of the Barb had "Mutilation Mysteries" as its cover headline, along with a hodgepodge illustration covering the following subheads: "Who needs 1500 cows' ears, eyes, lips, genitals and udders — and why? Do Satanists pilot US Army helicopters? Do coyotes carry knives?" etc., etc.

As you can tell from the subheads, the Barb discounted all official explanations that the "mutilations" were scavengings, the UFO's were Army or state government helicopters, etc. Instead the Barb concocted an elaborate conspiracy story for its readers.

Then, it was the real underground newspaper of the Bay Area, the Examiner, which has never managed to get above ground, that became the vehicle to spread the story to people on the SF side of the Bay. And the way the Examiner presented it, the story was replete with UFOs, voodoo rituals and Satanic cults, and even vampire bats thrown in for bad measure.

James P. Finefrock, the Examiner reporter chosen for the job, won't tell me which editor read the Barb and decided this was a fit story for publication in San Francisco. "That's not pertinent," Finefrock explained. Maybe not. He agreed, though, it is pertinent how the Examiner concocted a local angle as an excuse for publication here, since there have been no reports of "mutilations" in California.

If you refer back to the April 19 Examiner, you will see that Finefrock's story leads off with gardeners finding garbage bags containing parts of a butchered chicken, duck, calf and "baby lamb." Finefrock decided on his own, he told me — not by editor's order — to link these garbage bag discoveries with "cattle mutilations" so that the Examiner could have a tie-in justifying the headline "The great mutilation mystery" and a boxed subhead: "Trail of animal carcasses stretches from Plains to here, but no arrests have been made and police are baffled."

I asked Finefrock if he or any of his sources had any evidence to establish the garbage discoveries as anything but normal butchering done by people in the preparation for meals. Finefrock admitted there was no evidence that would support any other conclusion. Then how could he put these butchering in the category of cattle mutilations? He replied that "the method of cutting up the parts seemed to be the same."

Also, one patrolman who looked at the butchered animals said they might have been killed as part of a "voodoo ritual."

Next, I asked Finefrock how he happened to define cattle deaths as "mutilations," since that term has a specific dictionary definition attached to it. He admitted he did not look up the word in the dictionary and was unaware of its dictionary definition when he wrote his story. "I understood from the officials I talked to it means the deliberate removal by humans of parts of carcasses," Finefrock said. (If it's a carcass, it cannot be mutilated. Look up "mutilate" in any dictionary.)

What "officials"? There were several, but Finefrock said his main source was Fred Warren, whom he described as head of the "Nevada Bureau of Livestock Investigation." But there is no such agency. Warren is director of the Nevada State Department of Agriculture's Division of Brand Inspection. I phoned him and read back to him the key paragraph in Finefrock's story:

"A survey made by Nevada officials confirmed more than 700 mutilations in 15 western states over an 18-month period ending in December [1975]. The Dolores Park incident [the butchering discovered in garbage bags] was the first reported in an urban area."

"Finefrock attributes this statement to you," I told Warren. "He says you are the main official who confirmed the 700 mutilations. Is that accurate?"

Warren said it was.

With less preparation, I could have taken Warren's reply to mean that he had surveyed all the officials who had conducted all the same investigations I surveyed, ignored the fact none of the cattle deaths were mutilations, and told Finefrock on that very basis they were all mutilations. But I was prepared, and I knew exactly what question to ask.

"How do you define 'mutilations'?"

"Mutilations," Warren replied, "are dead animals — cattle — of which we cannot determine the cause of death, and reproductive or sex organs have been removed, and blood has been removed, and we can't establish by what method they removed the blood. In some cases an eye has been removed or the genitals have been removed, and the blood drained, and no useable or edible meats taken."

I explained to Warren why he could not use such a definition for "mutilations" and it's improper to categorize eyes and genitals as inedible meats, since predators eat them. He became quiet and made no comment.

Since Warren had used his own illogical, irrational, non-dictionary definition, I wanted to know whether he had discovered any evidence that any of the deaths he referred to as "mutilations" were caused by people.

"No," Warren replied. "The final analysis — because it couldn't be determined by what or whom — was the conclusion that they were all caused by predators. Predators did all the mutilations."

I explained patiently to Warren that he was contradicting himself. "Predators are animals. Animals do not mutilate other animals. Animals eat other animals. In the process they devour various parts. That's not mutilation. Only human beings mutilate, and even they do not do that as part of the eating process. Then they butcher."

Warren said he understood my point. So, then I asked him whether his survey of the same investigations I had surveyed had led him to any evidence that the "mutilations" which are not mutilations were anything but scavengings by predators.

"No," Warren replied. "There is no evidence of humans. It's all predators."

Yet here is what the Examiner's Finefrock told me at the end of our talk:

"I'm sure if you check around, you'll come to the same conclusion I did — that there are a great many mysterious stories and nobody has the answers to them."

Right you are, Finefrock. Why, just the other day I was out in my back yard and I saw a mutilated snail. Its shell was all dried up — all the blood had been drained out of it. There were no tracks around it and the day before I had seen a helicopter. I asked my neighbors, and they said they had seen mutilated snails under similar circumstances. And just last week there was a report in the papers about the longest snail in the world dying for unexplained reasons.

Nobody yet has the answer to this obviously connected mystery, Finefrock. Get on the story, will you? □

EDITOR'S NOTE

Burton Wolfe studied the history of Satanism for one year and familiarized himself with the contemporary occult scene in preparation for his biography of Anton Szandor LaVey, The Devil's Avenger, published by Pyramid in 1974. LaVey's Church of Satan has compiled the only complete, centralized file in existence on the cattle mutilation hoax. Wolfe was given access to that file for preparation of this article.

The year of the vampire

How a Berkeley woman became an overnight publishing sensation

By Mickey Friedman

Since this whole thing started, I got the first two 'breather' calls I've ever gotten." Anne Rice told me at her Berkeley apartment one recent afternoon. "Breather and obscene."

Besides breathers, Rice has also heard from: (1) a man who wants help in selling his screenplays; (2) Playboy magazine, which plans a two-page spread on her in August (clothed); (3) an "informal financial manager" who wants to help Rice manage her money; (4) The National Enquirer, which wants to publish a photograph of her standing in an Oakland cemetery ("It's going to be pretty corny," she says); (5) Paramount Studios in Hollywood, where a couple of movie producers want her to fly down for lunch; (6) an author who has written five novels and hasn't been able to get any of them published; (7) dozens of others.

The occasion of all this attention to Anne Rice, a 34-year-old writer who until May 5 was practically unpublished, is the appearance of her first novel, Interview with the Vampire. According to the New York publishing savants, the work is destined to be a Very Big Book. The facts of the case are almost legendary already: a $700,000 paperback sale; a movie sale to Paramount for $150,000, with escalators up to a quarter of a million; a Literary Guild alternate selection; foreign rights sold for upwards of $30,000 and still climbing. It's obvious the publishers have, if you'll pardon the expression, a big stake in Interview with the Vampire's success.

Rice's publisher, Alfred A. Knopf, is so convinced of Interview with the Vampire's significance that it put out a "Special Preview Edition" of the book for reviewers, ballyhooing "the debut of a dazzling storyteller" and comparing Rice's work with John Fowles's The Collector and Thomas Tryon's The Other ("I haven't read either of them," Rice says). The May issue of Mademoiselle has an excerpt, and there's a review in last week's Newsweek and a story in last week's People. In the month of May, and presumably for some time thereafter, it will be difficult for the American public to avoid hearing some mention of Interview with the Vampire.

This book that has sent New York into paroxysms of enthusiasm and caused such funds of cash to flow is "a story about power," according to Phyllis Seidel, Rice's literary agent in New York. "Power interests people," Seidel explains.

"Basically, it deals with immortality," says Peter Thomas, Rice's Hollywood agent. Actually, it's about power and immortality and much else, including vampires and death and, most of all, evil.

George Walsh, editor-in-chief of Ballantine Books, the house that bought the paperback rights, told me he believes that Interview with the Vampire is "on a theme that hasn't been touched before." Still, the book seems to fit into the category of supernatural fiction that has been giving the reading public nightmares since Rosemary's Baby. This genre would also encompass The Other and The Exorcist.

As the title indicates, the book consists of an interview with a vampire — specifically, a vampire named Louis, who traces his life from his initiation into vampirism by his villainous mentor, Lestat, on a Louisiana plantation in 1791, to present-day San Francisco, where he tells his story to a boy with a tape recorder. The idea of vampires is fairly titillating in itself, and Rice has made it more so with the sensuality of her writing.

Vampires in Rice's world are incapable of sex, but she has converted the kill, which the vampire must perform every day to survive, into a macabre substitute. Louis says, "I won't tell you again what it was like, except that it caught me up just as it had done before, and as killing always does, only more; so that my knees bent and I half lay on the bed, sucking her dry, that heart pounding again that would not slow, would not give up."

Rice is strongest in her ability to tell a story, to permeate it with sensuous detail that makes it palpable and real. Her rendering of the world of the vampire is an impressive imaginative feat, and her powers of invention in the realm of the macabre are considerable. Consider, for example, the child vampire, Claudia, doomed to live out immortality in the body of a five-year-old child. Here is Louis describing her at the kill: "Like a child numbed with fright she would shiver her plea for help to her gentle, admiring patrons, and as they carried her out of the square, her arms would fix about their necks, her tongue between her teeth, her vision glazed with consuming hunger. They found death fast in those first years."

Rice intended Interview with the Vampire, however, to do more than give the reader a slight frisson. Louis is a character tormented because he cannot reconcile the problem of why evil exists, and much of the book is devoted to his philosophical investigations. "The question of evil was to me one of the major themes of the book," Rice says. "I guess my worst fear with regard to it is that some people won't give it a chance because of the vampire theme."

Good news for SF trivia buffs

San Francisco Almanac: Everything You Want to Know About the City, by Gladys Hansen, Chronicle Books, 279 pp., $5.95.

San Franciscophiles will certainly be intrigued by this compendium of probably-useless-but-fascinating facts about our city. Did you know that the geographical center of town is between Alvarado and 23rd Street on the east side of Grandview? Or that Bishop Fulton J. Sheen blessed us with the comment, "There is more grace per square foot in San Francisco than any place on earth"? Or that there are 37 varieties of butterflies indigenous to the city?

A browse through San Francisco Almanac uncovers many unexpected amusements. In the bibliography of books about San Francisco, I was pleased to see an entire heading called "Graft." The chronology is full of events I would like to know more about (Jan. 13, 1948 — "Lewis Reece attempts to harness tide at Point Lobos; fails after three attempts") or had momentarily forgotten (Mar. 22, 1968 — "President's daughter Lynda Johnson ordered off cable car for eating ice cream cone").

The "Geography" chapter, my favorite, has a lovely section on streets. San Francisco's oldest street, I now know, is Grant Avenue; the longest (7.29 miles) is Mission; the widest (125 feet) is Van Ness. Laguna Street was named for a pond named Washerwoman's Lagoon. And so on.

Movies made in (or about) San Francisco are also listed alphabetically from Adventure (1945) with Clark Gable and Greer Garson, to The World in His Arms (1952) with Gregory Peck, Ann Blyth and Anthony Quinn. And if you're interested, you'll even find the words to our City Song ("I left my heart . . .").

In short, there is more about San Francisco in this book than you will ever need to know, but it's fun to know it. Bravo to City Archivist Gladys Hansen for putting together a trivia buff's delight.

A 1930 Communist parade up Market Street

Anne Rice: big bucks in bloodsucking

Rice had always found vampires a fascinating topic, but felt that it had never been treated seriously. "It has a lot of deep meaning inherent in it or it wouldn't be so popular," she says. "What I was trying to do was discover it." She repeatedly ran into problems because people didn't believe she was in earnest. The book was rejected by several editors who, she says, "weren't reading past their misconceptions and preconceptions about vampires and what you can do with it. And even up to just a few weeks before Knopf accepted it I remember telling a friend of mine, just about in despair, 'I think I made a terrible mistake. I've hung everything I had to say on a theme nobody will buy.'"

She was wrong. Alfred Knopf not only thought her blend of blood and angst was salable, but they managed to convey their enthusiasm to the rest of the publishing world. As a result, Anne Rice will not have to worry about where her next meal will come from in the next few years. The book has passed the stage of being simply a first novel, or even a good first novel: it has attained the status of an Event.

Rice and her novel first burst on the larger public consciousness of the Bay Area on Jan. 28 of this year, when Herb Caen published an item referring to Rice, somewhat to her chagrin, as a "Berkeley housewife" (she is married to Stan Rice, a poet who teaches at San Francisco State) and mentioning the large paperback and movie sales. A couple of weeks later, the "Book Ends" section of the New York Times Book Review ran an article about Interview with the Vampire under the heading "Money Talk," reporting the $150,000 movie sale and $700,000 auction for the paperback rights.

"When numbers that big appear in the press, they create their own kind of cyclical thing," Anne Rice explains. "I mean, they create an interest in the book, and then the book gets more numbers, in terms of money."

Interview with the Vampire has been a hot item ever since Knopf bought it for a $12,000 advance in October of 1974. The Knopf sale came after Rice met Phyllis Seidel at the Squaw Valley Community of Writers. Seidel read the manuscript and sent it to editor Victoria Wilson at Knopf.

"When I read the book, I thought it was incredible," Wilson told me. "She was obviously a very, very talented writer." But talent, surely, is only one of many necessary components for a book to make this big a splash? What about the commercial possibilities? Wilson denies that this was a primary factor for her: "I didn't buy the book because I thought it was going to be very successful," she says.

The book was sold to the Literary Guild as an alternate selection for what the New York Times Book Review calls a "modest" $7,500, but then big excitement came with the movie sale in January. That aspect was handled by Peter Thomas, Rice's Hollywood agent. How, I asked him, is a book sold to the movies?

"I try to package," he told me. "I bring the property to the attention of a good director, a good writer and so on. The producers and directors who know me know I have excellent taste." Why was the price so high? "I hate to put it in these terms," Thomas says, "but it's basically the same way you sell a used car.

'Selling a novel to the movies is basically the same way you sell a used car. You make a judgment on how many buyers will be interested.'

You make a judgment on how many buyers will be interested, then you set the price accordingly."

There was a lot of interest in Interview with the Vampire, Thomas says, because "indications were it was going to be a best-seller, get good reviews, and it was very cinematic — there would be no problem making it into a movie."

Paramount's purchase brought a surge of interest from the paperback houses. "After the movie sale, everyone in New York had a pirated copy of the book," says Phyllis Seidel. "People were making bids when it hadn't even been submitted." This fever culminated in the "paperback auction" that Ballantine won.

George Walsh, editor-in-chief at Ballantine, was one of several people there who decided to make the winning bid. As he explained it, "Most of our money is made in fiction, which is the reverse of the situation in hardcover publishing. We feel that Interview with the Vampire has the potential to be what we call a 'breakout' novel — that it has a theme that will intrigue large numbers of people. We feel the potential is there for a huge mass market audience." Erica Jong's Fear of Flying, which was the first big women's liberation novel, or The Seven Per Cent Solution, by Nicholas Meyer, which started a Sherlock Holmes revival, would be examples of other "breakout" books, Walsh says.

A big factor in the final price of the paperback rights, according to Walsh, was the fact that there had been so much word-of-mouth publicity about Interview with the Vampire that all the bidders were particularly anxious to have it. Another factor was that a prestigious publishing house like Knopf, whose editor-in-chief, Robert Gottlieb, is highly respected, was showing so much enthusiasm about the book.

"Quite often, books that are not good in quality sell for a lot because there's a feeling that they'll be a commercial success," Walsh says. "In this instance, we're fortunate, because it's a quality novel, and we hope it will get enthusiastic reviews."

It's still a bit early to tell what the overall tenor of the reviews will be. Publisher's Weekly was enthusiastic indeed, calling Interview with the Vampire "macabre, eerie, spellbinding, not for the squeamish, certainly, but a rare treat for those who appreciate a high degree of originality in their fiction." Ms., on the other hand, said the book was "often so dullingly repetitive, that you wish the author would press the 'fast forward' button on the tape recorder and get on with it."

Now, a review in Ms., will not make or break a book. But The New York Times Book Review is another story, and in the May 2 edition, reviewer Leo Braudy dealt Interview with the Vampire a body blow, concluding, "There is no story here, only a series of sometimes effective but always essentially static tableaux out of Roger Corman films, and some self-conscious soliloquizing out of Spiderman comics, all wrapped in a ballooning, pompous language."

Newsweek wasn't enthusiastic either; their reviewer, Walter Clemons, called it "a piquant if unsatisfying experience." The hopes for good reviews, evidently, are not to be universally fulfilled. This is not, however, necessarily the kiss of death, to borrow a vampiric image. Many books have attracted more acidic comments and have gone on to sell zillions.

Interview with the Vampire is now dependent on the fickle pulse of public opinion. Will we want vampires this year? There's a lot of money riding on the hope that we will. There are no sure things in publishing, but if talent, big bucks and national publicity can make a best-seller, Interview with the Vampire has as good a chance at bestsellerdom as any book is likely to get.

Red star over 24th St.

China Books and Periodicals, 2929 24th St., SF. Open 9 am-6 pm, Mon.-Sat.; 10 am-5 pm Sun. 282-2994.

Henry Noyes, the affable middle-aged proprietor and founder of China Books and Periodicals, describes his clientele as two basic groups: "Movement people and others who are interested in Chinese music, art and literature."

Surely the "movement people" will find much to interest them. China Books has been the national US importer and subscription agency for Chinese publications since 1960, and the narrow little store, tucked in among the bakeries and tamale parlors of 24th Street, carries not only all the books printed in English by the Foreign Languages Press of Peking but a good selection of books about China from American and other presses as well.

The neatly arranged shelves are crowded with pamphlets and larger collections of the writings of Chairman Mao, Marxist-Leninist works and sections on Latin American, Black and Women's Liberation struggles. China Books is also a center for Vietnamese publications, carrying all books published by the Foreign Languages Publishing House of Hanoi.

China Books is a browser's joy. The sections are clearly marked, the books are well displayed, and the staff is helpful. Posters of happy peasants marching, working and producing, and of a benign Chairman Mao, smile down from the walls and cost as little as 50¢ for a half-size poster and $1 for a full-size. According to Sandra Field, a China Books staff member, the posters are among the most popular items in the store.

The periodicals range from the political weekly Peking Review (25¢) to the feature articles and color photographs of China Pictorial (60¢). If you're considering acupuncture, you might want to try a copy of the Chinese Medical Journal ($1.50), which chronicles what's going on in Chinese medicine, while Chinese Literature (60¢) carries fiction, criticism and reproductions of works of art.

China Books' all-time bestseller, says Henry Noyes, is Quotations from Chairman Mao, which you can get in red plastic vest-pocket-size for 35¢ and pocket-size for 60¢. Since it first appeared in 1966 it has sold more than 400,000 copies in this country. Other well-received works have been An Outline of Chinese Acupuncture ($12.50), New China's First Quarter Century ($1.75), Inside a People's Commune ($1.25) and New Women in New China (50¢).

Not all the books at China Books are strictly political, although most of them concentrate on various aspects of the class struggle. You'll also find Chinese Kites: How to Make and Fly Them ($4.95) and colorful books on the Chinese artifacts that drew great interest during last year's exhibit of archaeological finds. My favorite of all the books I looked at, however, is Peasant Paintings from Huhsien County ($5.95), a delightful volume of reproductions. These cheery studies of workers harvesting luscious green-and-white cabbages, tending a yardful of obviously healthy chickens or picking cartloads of persimmons from trees laden with vibrant orange fruit will surely raise the spirits of even the most confirmed capitalist.

China Books and Periodicals carries more than books and periodicals, too. A friend of mine always shops there for small gift items at Christmas, and it's a great place to get unusual things cheap: traditional blue cotton workers' caps for $2, for instance. You'll find elaborate, delicate, hand-done paper cuttings for as little as $1, which is the price for the two I liked best: a series of an engaging panda eating bamboo, and a long-legged heron standing in a pond. Prices on the paper-cuts can go as high as $7.50 for a hand-painted traditional landscape.

China Books also carries a selection of records ($1.95). I have one called "Going to Shaoshan in the Rays of the Morning Sun," which contains selections like "The Hearts of the People of Yen'an Are Turned to Chairman Mao" and "Red is the Sun Shining Over the Border Region." The music is quite rousing in spots, and I've discovered it grows on you.

Parents should take note of China Books' selection of children's literature and records. One of the most popular children's books is Little Sisters of the Grassland, the story of two Mongolian sisters who save a commune's sheep ($2.95 cloth; $1.25 paper).

Franco's My Lai

An atrocity that literally wiped a town off the map

By Peter Carroll

Guernica: The Crucible of World War II, by Gordon Thomas and Max Morgan Witts, Stein & Day, 319 pp., $8.95, hardbound.

The Spanish National Tourist Office (209 Post, SF) will gladly provide American tourists with a modern map of Spain. It is a beautiful map, showing major and minor roadways, railroad lines, airports, castles and fishing and hunting reserves, as well as the paradors recommended by the government for exquisite dining.

But there is one striking omission on this otherwise complete map—the town of Guernica. This omission cannot easily be dismissed as a clerical oversight because Guernica is not exactly an insignificant town. It is the spiritual and cultural center of the Basque people located near the French border, and for centuries Guernica has been a symbol of Basque independence.

The reasons for this cartographical "error" emerge clearly in Guernica, a chronicle of the town's most famous event. On April 26, 1937, the German Condor Legion, which provided air support for Franco's armies during the Spanish Civil War, bombed and strafed the town in an unprecedented slaughter of the civilian population. It's no wonder the Spanish government would prefer that American tourists bypass this monument to Fascist terror and brutality.

Thomas and Witts, who have collaborated on several other projects, including their 1972 book, The San Francisco Earthquake, went to Guernica in 1974 to interview the survivors of the attack and then traveled to Germany to meet with the survivors of the Condor Legion. The result is a highly readable and dramatic account of the 48 hours that preceded the tragedy.

Guernica was the My Lai of its day, an international outrage that vividly demonstrated the horror of Fascist warfare and served as a stark warning of what would follow. Spain was the testing ground of the most modern tools of war at that time, and the planner of the Guernica bombing raid, Wolfram von Richthofen (cousin of World War I's Red Baron), was later credited with perfecting the aerial blitzkrieg that spread devastation through the major cities of Europe during World War II.

In recreating this event, Thomas and Witts carry the reader back and forth from the daily events of the townspeople of Guernica to the Condor headquarters at Vitoria. They follow, for example, the town baker on his delivery route through the streets, show his complaining about the theft of his flour, the shortages of gasoline for his car (it was commandeered for ambulance duty before it was destroyed in the attack), and the killing of cats for food. It's a people's-eye view of history, mundane in its motives but packed with a rich human universality. In similar fashion, Thomas and Witts tell the story of nuns and nurses, bankers and businessmen, parents and children.

Though this approach increases the human drama of the narrative, the use of reminiscences is only as reliable as the witnesses themselves. For the most part, Thomas and Witts are careful about their evidence, especially within the town of Guernica. We learn, for example, that there were a few potential military targets in the town—even though the Germans did not possess that information and consequently did not attack those targets. Moreover, the authors are careful to explain the political prejudices held by various townspeople which might have influenced their testimony.

In dealing with the German side of the story, however, Thomas and Witts are less scrupulous. Their discussion of the bombing mission from the perspective of the Condor Legion gives the impression that the primary target was the Renteria Bridge, an important line of transportation outside Guernica. Yet the description of the bombing raid itself clearly shows that nearly all the German planes ignored that objective and instead aimed their bombs and machine guns on civilian targets within the town. Could it be that the former pilots of the Condor Legion are unreliable witnesses? Could they have bad memories or bad consciences? Could they be lying?

One thing is sure. When Franco's soldiers marched into Guernica three days after the attack, they crossed over the still-intact Renteria Bridge. Certainly the Fascist commanders did not hesitate to falsify the record in 1937. "Guernica was not bombed by my air force," declared Franco in a press release. "It was destroyed with fire and gasoline by the Basques themselves."

Thomas and Witts claim to be refuting Franco's accusation, though other historians, even in Spain, have provided better refutations already. By giving the idea a hypothetical legitimacy, the authors are merely establishing a straw-man argument. More seriously, their reluctance to challenge the German witnesses leads them to skirt the important questions of responsibility within the Fascist command. Despite the book's sympathy for the people of Guernica, it is unfortunate that Thomas and Witts did not choose to expose more plainly biased gibberish that Sylvia Plath aptly called "Luftwaffe... gobbledygoo."

Hot on the scent

A week with a blind, dapper Italian womanizer

Scent of a Woman, directed by Dino Risi. Music Hall, Larkin & Geary, San Francisco.

Scent of a Woman sounds as if it ought to be a porno film, and most of the people who came to the Music Hall to see it on opening night must have expected one, since about half the patrons were males seated alone. It has a lot to do with sex, or at least with the sexual drive, but it's not pornographic. Even Larry Parrish, the renegade assistant US attorney down in Memphis who's prosecuting everybody on charges of "conspiracy to transport obscene material across state lines," would have a hard time making his case on this film.

Still, Scent of a Woman has the feel of pornography. It's a politically retrograde movie. The movie is practically a textbook on the old-line view of women. In the film, women are objects to be sized up and graded, like pieces of meat—bought, sold, used. Some are preferable to others, but it's all a matter of taste—they are simply of different cuts. All the women in the film are professional or amateur tarts, save two—the hero's aged, nagging aunt and the Woman Who Loves Him, so beautiful, so sweet-natured, so devoted that she is literally selfless—she doesn't exist as a person.

All this is obvious; one doesn't need to be an impassioned feminist to recognize the male chauvinism floating on the surface of this film. And so what? Does this recognition determine the merits of the film? Unfortunately, I think for a lot of people, it will. Scent of a Woman will be deemed politically offensive and that's that. But it is not a judgment of artistic merit to describe this film as sexist any more than it is to describe Birth of a Nation as racist or Oliver Twist as anti-Semitic.

Much of the best art is terribly offensive, but people who recognize this when it's the bourgeois sensibility that's being offended—people who relish the works of Genet and Bunuel and Henry Miller—become closed-minded ideologues when it's their sensibilities that are being offended. Scent of a Woman is not a great work in the idol-smashing class. In many ways—not just in the treatment of its women—it's not even a good film. But it's a more complex picture, especially in the portrayal of its hero, than many in the audience will be willing to see.

The hero of Scent of a Woman could have been a flat stereotype, but the filmmakers—writer-director Dino Risi and his coscenarist Ruggiero Mascara—have composed their hero out of two vastly different movie stereotypes, and the sparks that fly across the chasm between these stereotypes ignite the film. On one side the hero, named Fausto and energetically played by Vittorio Gassman, is virtually a caricature of Italian machismo—he's a vain, dapper, alcoholic, stubborn, bullying womanizer and an ex-army officer to boot. On the other side, he's blind—injured in battle when a bomb exploded in his hand, which has now been replaced by a wooden limb—and though he pretends to be self-reliant, Fausto needs to be helped, escorted, cared for, watched over. Ordinarily, we'd expect the filmmakers to play for our sympathies in this situation: they've given us a blind, disabled war veteran hero, for God's sake! But each side of Fausto's character undercuts the other, and we don't know quite how to take him.

Scent of a Woman is the story of a week that Fausto spends in the company of a blandly nice-looking young army recruit, who is given a week's "furlough" to look after Fausto. Fausto is almost brutal to the young man, whom he insists on calling Ciccio, though his real name is Giovanni. Fausto does not like to be contradicted. "Watch out for that Fiat 600," he tells Giovanni as they are crossing a street. "It was a 500," replies Giovanni, who, after all, has seen the car, but this is nothing to Fausto. "It must be souped up," Fausto pronounces.

Fausto takes Giovanni to Genoa, where the blind man sniffs out women like a hunting dog. "I smell young armpits," he says. "Tell me what she looks like." He dispatches Giovanni to arrange for the services of a whore—tall, large hips, firm rump, hair long and black. (Fausto is emphatic about this last point, though it can hardly be of great consequence to him.)

The two travel to Rome, where they have dinner with Giovanni's girlfriend. Fausto, not surprisingly, monopolizes her attention. He kisses her goodbye, and then proclaims that she is "peddling ass," which he deduces from the fact she is carrying a $200 purse. Fausto is probably right, but he's as cruel about his right judgments as he is about his wrong ones. "What a foul-mouthed bastard," the blind man says of himself, and we are not inclined to disagree, which is a credit to the filmmakers' ability to overcome our natural sympathies.

Finally, Fausto and Giovanni travel to Naples, where they put up with an old army friend of Fausto's, also blind, and here the film falls apart. Perhaps this is one blind man too many, but for whatever reason, Risi and Mascara, who have to this point developed a nice, loose, unemphatic rhythm and episodic structure, suddenly plunge us into an old-fashioned melodramatic plot about life, death, love, sex, honor, friendship, faith, courage and the true nature of happiness.

The last half-hour of Scent of a Woman is exactly what its critics, or rather opponents, think the whole film is—"romantic swill," Pauline Kael called it. But the first hour or so is a complicated and perplexing character study, though perhaps not complicated enough. Fausto's character, as written and played, is a bit too carefully prepared for us, too rigid, too completely realized—it's all there on screen with nothing for us to fill in.

Giovanni, by contrast, is an appealing blank, barely formed as a personality. He can change, and by the end of the film, we begin to wonder what effect the rush of events is going to have on him. When Giovanni returns to the army after his week with Fausto, has he changed? we wonder. The displacement of our interest from the adult Fausto, whose possibilities are limited, to the "child" Giovanni, whose possibilities seem infinite, is probably natural, but the filmmakers don't seem to recognize this, keeping their camera trained on Vittorio Gassman's big performance. Yet it's a tribute to their skill that they keep us wondering—at least, if the subconscious politics of the filmmaking doesn't blind us to its very conscious artistry. □

Another mother

... for (and against) peace

Mother Courage and Her Children, Bertolt Brecht, The Theater Workers, Goodman Building, 1117 Geary (near Van Ness). Fri., Sat., Sun., 8 pm through June 5. Adm., gen. $3, students $2. No phone.

"Remember what one fox said to another that was caught in a trap? 'If you stay there, you're just asking for trouble.'"

—From Brecht's Mother Courage

There are scenes in the Theater Workers' stimulating, imaginative, intelligent production of Mother Courage that equal any theater I've attended anywhere at any price. Be warned, though: the Theater Workers' effort is consciously crude. It takes a while to get interested, and some of the segments fall flat. Nevertheless I recommend it highly. Don't miss it. Go and see Mother Courage.

Written in 1939, when Brecht was already in exile from Nazi Germany, Mother Courage is considered an antiwar play, and it is. But it's also an antipeace play, or at least against "peace" on the terms allowed us in an aggressive and greedy society.

The play takes place during the Thirty Years War (1618-1648), a conflict that was superficially religious—Protestants versus Catholics. On closer scrutiny, however, the war emerges as a power struggle in which a collection of petty German princes formed an alliance with France, Sweden, Denmark and England in a bloody attempt to weaken the Austrian Hapsburgs and the Holy Roman Empire. As a result of this prolonged battle, mainly fought in Germany, the Empire declined, as did the population of a devastated Germany.

Brecht's leading character, Ann Fierling, better known as Mother Courage, makes her living from this war as a sutler, the owner of a small, mobile canteen business. When the play opens she has spent 17 years following armies with her wagon, supporting herself and her three children by feeding the soldiers. She received her nickname, she says, by driving "through the bombardments like a madwoman." It was not foolhardy bravery, however, that drove her on—it was her dogged will to endure. She had 50 loaves of bread in her cart: "They were going moldy. What else could I do?" she asks us.

Most often, Mother Courage feels forced to act by circumstance, by what she perceives as economic necessity. She has nothing against morality, but like the Sunnyvale missile worker with a mortgage and a family, morality to Mother Courage often seems like an abstract luxury. How do you do the right thing and still survive?

As drama critic Richard Gilman points out in his brilliant essay on Brecht (contained in The Making of Modern Drama), Mother Courage both longs for and is frightened of any lengthy peace. "Don't tell me peace has broken out just when I've bought all these supplies," she says bitterly. But Brecht assures us the lull will be short-lived. "The war has nothing to worry about," one of his characters ruefully comments. "It can look forward to a prosperous future."

For Brecht, no real peace was possible under a capitalistic system. There might be a brief cessation in the actual fighting, but as long as profits were to be had, the battles would go on and conscience would be smothered by expediency.

Brecht did not single out America for condemnation in Mother Courage, but America can serve as an example of his "peace" hypothesis. The New York Times, for instance, in its peacetime Sunday, May 9, 1976 edition, quietly announced an aggression against our proclaimed ethics: "Americans own a larger and faster-growing interest in white-ruled South Africa than in any other African country, enjoy a swelling surplus on trade with South Africa and continue to buy strategically important chrome from Rhodesia, despite a United Nations embargo." Further, in "peacetime" America, almost $400 per capita of our tax monies is spent directly on the military (around $50 per capita goes toward education).

"The business of America is business," Calvin Coolidge once said, and investing in apartheid as well as spending for "defense" is big business indeed. Our "prosperity" is intertwined with such spending, and, like Mother Courage's flight with her moldy loaves, economics more often than not determines America's actions.

Taking note of this tendency in both the US and Mother Courage (a play which Brecht subtitled "A Chronicle of the Thirty Years War"), the Theater Workers have added up this nation's war years from the war of 1812 to Vietnam and ironically offer their strong Brecht production as a Bicentennial gesture "to celebrate," they say, "the birthday of a country that brought you thirty years of war out of economic necessity."

The Theater Workers, whose 12 members include a core of actors who met while performing with the New Shakespeare Company, are now almost two years old. Mother Courage is their second production in the Goodman Building (their first was Tennessee Williams's Gnädiges Fraulein) where they perform in a narrow storefront.

It's a perfect setting for their adaptation of Brecht's episodic drama. The audience, perched up on pillowed bleachers, looks down on Mother Courage's wagon, a wondrous conglomeration of poles and rags, equipped with rubber tires, two disintegrating car seats and the skeleton of a steering wheel. On one wall is a huge American flag, on another a ramp rigged up with a harness device which serves as the scaffold where Mother Courage's children meet their untimely deaths.

The play's action fills the space and at one point even spills out into the open air when Katrin, Mother Courage's mute daughter, tries to leave home by hitchhiking on Geary Street. Some Brechtian purists may righteously object to the liberties taken by director Kenneth Wilkinson and musical arranger and accompanist Scrumbly Koldewyn (who has the soldiers tap-dance their way through a chorus of Singin' in the Rain). But most of the changes serve the spirit of the play and if anything add to the desired Brechtian effect of thoughtful alienation.

As Mother Courage, Bonnie Borenstein gives an unbelievable performance. When I saw her come on stage, a strikingly pretty young woman, I didn't believe she could play the role. She magnificently proved me wrong, fulfilling all the contradictory dimensions of this character whose instinct to love is constantly thwarted by the need to eat.

Director Wilkinson effectively plays the Southern-drawling chaplain, who after complacently living off of Mother Courage condemns her as "a hyena of the battlefield." In the beginning of the evening Lester Jones overplays the younger son, Swiss Cheese, making him a drooling idiot rather than a simpleton. But Jones later recoups and acts out a wrenchingly moving scene with Katrin, well portrayed by Susan Sabatino. As the prostitute, Yvette, Kristin Pruitt, a large, husky-voiced and interesting-looking woman, often seems uncomfortably camp. Harold Hector as the cook and William Sweatman as the older son Eilif both have fine moments. Sweatman is particularly affecting as he goes off to the hangman clutching an orange in his handcuffed hands. □

New sounds from old pros

Two local jazz giants who helped make it all possible

JOE HENDERSON: Black Miracle (Milestone)
DENNY ZEITLIN: Expansion (1750 Arch)

With all the excitement over the Bay Area's hot young jazz bands, it's easy to lose sight of some of the old pros who've been doing it all along. Bands like Listen and New Music Alliance are happening now, but local jazz giants like Joe Henderson and Denny Zeitlin have helped make it possible.

Tenor Saxophonist Joe Henderson has, over the course of a 20-year career, played just about every kind of music it's possible to play on his instrument. He came out of the Detroit R&B scene in the late Fifties with a background that included bebop, country and the blues. He played with such diverse talents as Horace Silver, Freddie Hubbard, Lee Morgan, Herbie Hancock and Alice Coltrane. He even put in four months with Blood Sweat & Tears. (Everybody makes mistakes.)

Henderson refuses to be pinned down to a style or to a format. His previous album, Canyon Lady, was dominated by Afro-Latin rhythms and instrumentation. Black Miracle finds him in a new groove with a new set of sidemen. With a minimum of artistic compromise, Henderson has fashioned a commercial context guaranteed to take his music to the people or sell a lot of records, depending on your point of view.

The music on Black Miracle is basically the same kind of broadly accessible commercial funk that Herbie Hancock is playing, though with less reliance on electronics. Tight ensemble work is the main element of the sound, filled in with some exhilarating solos and duets by Henderson, trumpet player Oscar Brashear and ace trombonist George Bohanon. Ron Carter, Harvey Mason, Dawilli Gongga and Lee Ritenour round out an exceptionally strong supporting cast. Only labels and covers are on more jazz albums than Ron Carter these days.

Henderson's strength is the eclectic brilliance of his individual lines. He moves from lower-register honking to upper-register blaring more fluidly than any tenor player I've ever heard—and he integrates the two extremes just as smoothly. You can pick out small fragments of his lines that recall Sonny Rollins or John Coltrane or Ornette Coleman, but the overall sound is uniquely Joe Henderson. His major weakness is that he doesn't build his lines into consistently interesting extended passages. His solos just kind of run on, with frequent flashes of stunning power but with little overall structural development. Henderson compensates for this weakness somewhat by building a lot of structure into his compositions and arrangements, but it's not quite enough to overcome the occasional monotony.

After moving to the Bay Area several years ago and focusing his energies on teaching and recording, Henderson is just now starting to get back into live performances with a series of West Coast dates. His touring band, composed of Mike Clark on drums, Mark Soskin on keyboards, Gary Smith on bass and Steve Erquiaga on guitar, is more direct and fundamental than the band on the album, sacrificing complexity and depth for straight-on power. Erquiaga is particularly impressive, interacting with and challenging Henderson's tenor in much the same way the other horns do on Black Miracle. As solid and rewarding an album as Black Miracle is, Henderson is even more exciting in person. You'll hate yourself years from now if you let his current spate of appearances pass you by.

Denny Zeitlin's Expansion was first issued privately by Zeitlin on a mail-order-only basis. As Zeitlin explains in the liner notes, "Feeling that the time was right for an album, but uncomfortable with the pressure on artists in the commercial marketplace, I began a record label on a modest mail order scale, attempting to keep the music as pure and direct as possible." Response to Zeitlin's pure and direct music induced Berkeley's 1750 Arch Street Records to pick up the album for commercial distribution.

Zeitlin was a successful modern jazz pianist in the Sixties before he decided to chuck it all and pursue his own muse. He wanted to be free to follow his imagination wherever it led, without worrying about fitting into a specific category. On Expansion that's just what he does, ably assisted by bassist Mel Graves and the very versatile drummer George Marsh, whose work with Listen has always impressed me. Zeitlin, Graves and Marsh explore the entire musical spectrum, incorporating elements of jazz, rock, electronic and classical music, using Latin, Asian and African motifs, working in formats ranging from close ensemble playing to totally free improvisation.

Joe Henderson: a brilliant eclectic

Some fragments may recall Rollins or Coltrane, but the overall sound is uniquely Joe Henderson.

Not everything on Expansion is entirely cohesive, of course. Zeitlin is an explorer, and as with any explorer, sometimes he gets you there and sometimes he doesn't. The function of a pioneer is to find paths others can safely follow, and getting lost occasionally is part of the game. Putting diverse elements together in nonobvious ways is always a risky business, but when it works it's worth all the risks and all the missteps. About half of Expansion works incredibly well. Zeitlin's mastery of a variety of keyboards, from basic acoustic piano to very spacey synthesizers, enables him to transcend the limitations of the drum-bass-keyboard trio and to produce virtually every variety of sound imaginable. He uses this variety to creat a deep musical collage that is consistently vivid and picturesque. You may not always enjoy this album, but you'll never be bored by it.

JEAN-LUC PONTY: Aurora (Atlantic)

Aurora is a genuine tour de force, arranged, composed, produced and superbly performed by the most important jazz violinist since Stephane Grappelli. Ponty is not exactly an overnight sensation; his second solo album comes after 15 years of experience all over the musical map. Though Ponty has put in a lot of time playing classical music and traditional European jazz, the main influences on his current work are the brilliant jazz-rock guitarists he's played with, Frank Zappa and John McLaughlin.

Except for the different timbre of his instrument, Ponty sounds like a guitarist most of the time, though with considerably more depth, thanks to the violin's wider tonal possibilities. His empathy with the guitar serves him well in some blistering duets with his band's real guitarist, Darryl Stuermer. Ponty's solo lines are beautifully clean and economical, with little of the reckless sawing that many electric violinists succumb to. His band, which also includes Patrice Rushen on keyboards, is up to every challenge he throws their way. No doubt about it, this is one auspicious album. Already an FM favorite, Aurora seems destined to be the same kind of milestone for Ponty that Headhunters was for Herbie Hancock. And deservedly so. □

MOVIES

Openings

Missouri Breaks

A Western set in the 1800s with Jack Nicholson as a desperado who, with his cohorts, causes so much trouble that the cattle ranchers hire Marion Brando to "regulate" them. Brando kills Nicholson's band off one by one until the two square off in a confrontation that only one survives (Wed/19 at Empire I, SF; Royal, SF; Serramonte, Daly City; Geneva Drive-In, SF; Tantoran, SB; Redwood City Drive-In, Redwood City; Century 21, Oakl.)

Mini-Reviews

All Screwed Up

Made between Love and Anarchy and Sweet Away, Lina Wertmüller's All Screwed Up is a speedy little soap opera about a group of young people who come to Milan from the Italian countryside and find the big city not entirely to their liking. One of them becomes a hooker, one a thief, one a fascist thug and so forth. From time to time, Wertmüller throws a Marxist slogan into her dialog, and there are vague hints that all the degradation and suffering is economically determined, the result of capitalist exploitation, but this is film-flam. Wertmüller could have made exactly the same film about a group of Ukrainian peasants who find themselves at the mercy of Moscow's big city life. Wertmüller is an immensely gifted filmmaker, and much of All Screwed Up is dazzlingly well made; it's just that she isn't the philosopher-queen her admirers fancy her to be. (Lumiere, SF; ACT II, Berk.) —L.P.

All The President's Men

Even if you loathe politics, want to forget Watergate and think of Robert Redford as just another pretty face, director Alan Pakula's edge-of-the-chair, Washington-Post-tells-all thriller will keep you riveted. Redford and Dustin Hoffman project just the right abrasive quality that made reporters Woodward and Bernstein uneasy bedfellows, and the rest of the stellar personnel (Jason Robards, Jack Warden, Martin Balsam and Hal Holbrook, for starters) make up not a collection of cameo roles but a perfectly cast assemblage of faultlessly intermeshing talent. Their efforts add up to two hours and ten minutes of total enthrallment — not bad, considering you already know how it all comes out. (North Point, SF; Showcase Oakland; Cinema I, Corte Madera; Redwood, Redwood City) —Z.J.

The Bad News Bears

The bad news is only in the title — the good news is that director Michael Ritchie has hit one out of the ballpark in this baseball-grounded story of switching losers into winners. Tatum O'Neal strikes one for feminism, but it's unfair to single her out, because every one of the tykes on this team scores a hit. Walter Matthau pops up as a diamond-in-the-rough, minor-league struck-out coach who looks as if the game has been played over him, and it's safe to say you'll have a ball with this little-league microcosm of adult behavior. Not only does it never allow sentiment to lapse into sentimentality, but it hits home on a lot of unexpected bases. (Regency II, SF; Oaks II, Berk.; Parkway II, SB; Northgate, SR) —Z.J.

End of the Game

This so-called thriller has such a monopoly on tedium that Parker Brothers will want to send it directly to jail. Set in Switzerland, the plot is as full of holes as that country's cheeses, and under the more Germanic than germane direction of Maximilian Schell the dialog is dismal, the acting automatic and the suspense suspended — all this in spite of the presence of Jon Voight, Robert Shaw, Jacqueline Bisset and the film acting debut of director Martin Ritt. One question emerges from all the confusion: how can a game end when it never passed "Go" in the first place? (Stage Door, SF) —Z.J.

Face to Face

Death, like taxes, is the certainty that has tormented Ingmar Bergman. Here he expresses his fear through his protagonist a woman psychiatrist. Her character is a gradual revelation of that dreadful limbo of the mind when emotions have been inhibited to the point of irrevocably disconnecting outward behavior from the inner self. Unable to bear what is not happening to her, she attempts suicide. Semi-comatose, she goes back step by guilt-ridden step to the beginning of the emotional crippling and fear that stem from harshly repressive, this-is-good-for-you parental treatment. Bergman communicates his fear — and also his confusion, for the film is full of paths that lead nowhere, but the one sure and certain thing is Liv Ullmann's brilliantly cathartic performance as the physician who cannot heal herself. (Surf, SF) —Z.J.

Hard Times

A good example of a film genre we just don't see enough of — the boxing film, though this time more in the tradition of Stanley Kubrick's early Fear and Desire. Charles Bronson, the world's greatest box office attraction everywhere but in America, lights his way through the Depression with heavy, Strother Martin, at his side. Directed Richard Harris and Nicol Williamson, to name but a few) illustrious, the costuming rich and varied — where, then, did it all go wrong? American expatriate director Richard Lester, who last year made Royal Flash, seems this year to have made Royal Hot Flash, since his Robin and Marian are certainly well into their Geritol years. Hepburn and Connery struggle valiantly with the lines given them in James (The Lion in Winter) Goldman's script, but Goldman no more understands them than Lester understands Goldman, and, to top it all off, the film was shot in 35 days — can you believe it? Unfortunately, yes. (Coronet, SF; Piedmont, Oakl.) —Z.J.

Salut l'Artiste

Writer-director Yves Robert (who made the Tall Blond films) and his coscenarist Jean-Loup Dabadie cook up the perfect French movie recipe, the one that never fails, but their ingredients — the charming but torrid hero (Marcello Mastroianni), the understanding wife (Carla Gravina), the elegant mistress (Françoise Fabian), the picturesque settings, the soupy score — are old; they've been sitting around for too long. The film is like an overripe piece of fine French cheese — it's moldy, and it smells. (Cannery, SF) —L.P.

Arthur Rubinstein: Love of Life, a documentary on the pianist. Sat/15-Sun/16, 1 and 3 pm, Act., Berk.

Scent of a Woman

Although this is not a porno film, it has the feel of one — the same locker-room macho-fantasy attitude toward women. But if one can get past the sexual politics, it's a complicated and perplexing character study. Writer-director Dino Risì offers us a hero who's a composite of two

The River Niger

Watts in a name might make for a Souther understanding of this black-on-black theme whose roots are in darkest Africa, because the River Niger is a poem begun by a middle-aged American Negro during his struggle to find his identity and completed only when he acknowledges his Black African heritage and its proud admonition, "Let my people grow." This pitch is carried a step further by his Vietnam veteran officer son who wants no part of the white man's burden and has a one-finger approach to integration. WAR, who wrote the Afro-American score, really drums it into you, and the excellent cast headed by Cicely Tyson and James Earl Jones skillfully dots the i's and crosses the t's in stating that black is beautiful. (UA I, Berk.) —Z.J.

conflicting stereotypes — a bullying, womanizing military man who is also blind and disabled, and Risi confounds our instinctive responses. In its last half-hour the film becomes a soggy, traditional melodrama about life, death, love, sex, faith, courage, friendship and the nature of happiness, but until it falls apart, Scent of a Woman has a pleasant, episodic structure and loose-jointed rhythm. Vittorio Gassman gives a big performance as the blind hero. (Music Hall, SF) —L.P.

Seven Beauties

Perhaps this film should be retitled The Seduction of You and Me, because director Lina Wertmüller has apparently been so swept away by acclaim that she has turned to the utterly outrageous and let the interpretations fall where they may. With studied grotesquerie she gives us comedy in the concentration camp, ribaldry in the rape scene and a pathetic, Chaplinesque anti-hero, Pasquale (Giancarlo Giannini), who will worm his way out of any situation simply to survive. And this finally emerges as the main theme — survival, whatever the cost, but Wertmüller has juxtaposed such total polarities to illustrate her point that the horrifying incidents are robbed of weight or substance, so that in the end, like Pasquale, they lack any meaning at all. (Act I, Berk.; Clay, SF) —Z.J.

Taxi Driver

Every lead-in should have a hooker, and in this film she's 12½ years old and played with passionless aplomb by 13-year-old Jodie Foster. This part thriller, part psychological study is like a two-headed coin—each side may be masterfully minted, but the total is counterfeit. Robert de Niro gives a superlative under-the-skin, inside-the-head performance as a man almost totally alienated from society, but director Martin Scorsese has flawed his film with contradictions and a seeming inability to make up his mind as to the right ending—so he gives us three. Nevertheless, a gripping and disturbing analysis of mankind versus the fifth and slime that constitute the very hard underbelly of urban life. (Cinema 21, SF, Albany, Albany) —Z.J.

W. C. Fields and Me

Rod Steiger IS W. C. Fields every single moment of an uncannily flawless performance, with Henry Mancini's theme underscoring all the right nuances. Too bad director Arthur Hiller decided to heed Fields's famous maxim, "Never give a sucker an even break," and make an uneven, lop-sided, overlong and overly sentimental movie, with Valerie Perrine as Carlotta (the "Me" of the title) sounding as uncomfortable with her lines as she looks with her Hollywood haute couture clothes on. But stay with it for Steiger — a stunning one-man show. (Alhambra II, SF) —Z.J.

Mini-Reviews

Beach Blanket Babylon Goes Bananas

Wed.-Thurs. at 8:30 pm, Fri.-Sat. at 8:30 and 11 pm, Sun. at 7:30 pm. Club Fugazi, 678 Green, SF, 421-4222, $6-$5.

Everything from Annie Oakley to Carmen Miranda, who wisecracks "it's very easy to make a friend, very hard to make a stranger!" This high-camp musical revue features three men, the California scene from Jeanette MacDonald to the Beach Boys. Star Nancy Bleiweiss sings the theme from Love Story under a six-foot headpiece that looks like a fruit bowl. The amazingly varied audience is half the fun. —A.C.

Bullshot Crummond

Tues.-Fri., 8:30 pm; Sat., 8 and 10:30 pm; Sun., 7:30 pm. Hippodrome Theatre, 412 Broadway, SF, 982-2343, $7-$5.

By and large a delightful old potboiler combining elements of vaudeville and British music hall comedy. Everything's here—an uncommonly handsome hero (very well proportioned if you catch my drift); a dastardly villain of Teutonic origins; a wispy, blond, sweet young thing; thrills, chills and chases galore. And it all comes out in the wash at the edge-of-your-chair conclusion. —M.S.

An Evening at Widow Begbick's Fri. at 8:30 pm and Sat. at 8:30 and 10:30 pm. Old Spaghetti Factory, 478 Green, SF, 863-6619, $4.50-$3.50.

This cabaret entertainment scores some solo strokes but falls short of the evocation of Twenties Berlin it tries to be. The Brecht-Weill songs still skewer their bourgeois targets to the proletarian wall, but their acid is somewhat diluted

Stepping Out dances Reclaiming, Sat/15, 8 pm, at Epic West, Berk. Plus Songs from Two Brothers.

Moonchildren

Thurs.-Sat. at 8:30 pm. Open Theater, 441 Clement nr. 6th Ave., SF, 751-3089, $4/$3 srs., students with valid ID.

The other "children of the Sixties" play in town, in which eight college kids crammed in a run-down apartment — the type with green walls, nail holes in the plaster and a grubby little refrigerator — make love rather than war, attend an occasional rally and end the semester with bad tastes in their mouths as their friendly landlord rips them off for the $50 security deposit. The title doesn't seem to have anything to do with the play, but the work's comic ironies and high spirits make it worth seeing. —F.F.

The Playboy of the Western World Thru May 16, Fri.-Sat. at 8:30 pm and Sun. at 7:30 pm, 2525 8th St./Dwight, Berk., 548-7677, $3-$2.

The 70-year-old Playboy of the Western World deserves honorable retirement. Much of this sardonic play about several man-chasing women who make a hero out of a protagonist who claims to have murdered his father is dated and without the shock appeal that prompted many people to virtually invade Dublin's famous Abbey Theatre, which staged the original production. The current Playhouse Company production is spirited enough, and superb performances by Miltie Smith and Robert A. Behling nearly redeem the evening, but nobody's going to picket 2525 8th St. over this mainly historical curiosity. —A.D.

Snoopy!!!

Wed. at 2 and 8:30 pm, Thurs.-Fri. at 8:30 pm, Sat. at 6 and 9:30 pm, Sun. at 3 and 7:30 pm. Little Fox Theatre, 533 Pacific Ave., SF, 434-4738, $8.50-$5.50.

This family-style musical comedy based on the famous "Peanuts" comic strip is staged by skilled professionals who certainly know how to entertain their audiences. Book, lyrics, acting and direction are technically flawless and often imaginative, all of which makes the play a big hit here and will no doubt do so when it opens in New York. For my taste, however, I just wish Charles Schulz would confine his Peanuts characters to the comic strip and not authorize their appearance everywhere from T-shirts to the stage. —A.D.

The Subject Was Roses

Thru May 29, Thur.-Sat., 8:30 pm, 2940 16th St. nr. Mission, SF, 621-2505, $3.50-$2.50.

Frank D. Gilroy's somewhat clichéd play about the bickering and lack of understanding in a lower-middle-class Irish family might still have a few things to say about domineering fathers and dutiful sons, but the current production by the SF Actors Ensemble suffers from a combination of weak acting and poor direction. The characterizations lack conviction; there seems to be no depth, no joy, no pungency to the production. —F.F.

Theatre reviews by Richard Chrisman, Andrew Cohn, Arthur Damond, Frederick Feied, Irene Oppenheim and Merrill Shindler.

To Boston by bus

How to 'ride the dog' and enjoy it.

By Chuck Fager

Most of my friends are snobs about travel. Flying is really the only way to go; or failing that, they take trains. Next comes a car pool or even the adventure of hitchhiking. Only as a last resort will most of them consider riding a bus a long way, and at that they discuss it only with much rolling-of-the-eyes and comments of "Thank God that's over."

So it's no surprise that these people were horrified when I told them I had recently traveled by bus from San Francisco to Boston and back in the space of two weeks, for a total of seven full days and nights on the road. "How could you stand it?" was the universal, only somewhat sympathetic response. I think half of them were convinced I'm a closet masochist, especially since my answer was that I enjoyed the trip and would gladly do it again.

With hard times apparently here to stay, however, even some of the more refined are having to reconsider how they spend their money. As luck would have it, the two major bus companies, Greyhound and Continental Trailways, are offering special ticket deals almost too good to pass up: passes that offer unlimited travel for various lengths of time, from 15 to 60 days, ranging from $125 to $250. I made my trip on a 15-day Greyhound Ameripass that cost me $125. (Trailways' EaglePass has the same terms.)

But you'd better act fast: the deal changes as of June 1. Greyhound is dropping the 15-day pass and raising the others to $250 for one month and $350 for two months; however, you can buy now and have the ticket's time span start later. A local Trailways spokesman said the rates would change next month but the new ones weren't established yet; and if you buy a pass this month you have to be on the bus by May 31.

Of course, long bus trips can be a bummer if you don't know what you're doing. To get the most out of the time in the special conditions of a bus requires some forethought. If you think about such journeys in the same category as visits to the dentist, as do my snobby friends, naturally they'll turn out crummy. But if you have a positive attitude, you can easily set them up to produce good results. Here are some tips I put together out of my bus travel experiences, little things which made a big difference:

1. Choose your seat carefully. There are a couple of important considerations here, one of which is smoking. By federal law, smoking is now only allowed in the last three rows of seats. Usually, though, there are a lot more nicotine junkies on any given bus than will fit into three rows, so it is normal to find people lighting up surreptitiously several rows farther forward. Nonsmokers need to take account of this and stay near the front. I learned this one the hard way, because I used to like to ride way in the back. But on this last trip I thought I would asphyxiate before we made it to Utah, where state law forbids smoking anywhere in buses; and at the Salt Lake rest stop, I moved forward.

After further experimentation, I have decided that the ideal seat for nonsmokers is in the third row from the front by the window. You will still get occasional whiffs of smoke from the cheaters near the middle; but further up the reading lights are dimmed, to keep from blinding the driver, or nonexistent, as in the front row. On a long trip, you're going to need that reading light, so the trade-off in exchange for the front row's better view is worth it.

2. Defend your territory. If you don't mind being crowded and making a lot of idle conversation, just look friendly and the seat next to you will be filled by a parade of people. That's not my style, however. I'm a loner on the road, I generally have work to do and I like elbow room, so I barricade myself into two seats.

Sitting next to the window in the third row, I pile stuff high on the aisle seat — a coat, briefcase, a bag or two, books, whatever. Then I glare steadily out the window until the bus is loaded and pulls out of the station, and usually end up with space to spread out and move around a little bit. People almost never bother me unless the bus gets absolutely packed. In that case, I wait till the driver says he needs the seat, then mumble, paw through my belongings and stall as long as possible, hoping that if there ends up being just one empty seat on the bus, it will be next to me.

This strategy is selfish, but it works. I kept my two-seat turf to myself for more than 6,000 of the 7,000 miles I traveled.

3. Bring a pillow and some cover. One other major gripe about buses concerns how hard it is to sleep while riding them. To be sure, few of us sleep sitting up at home, and the seats are hard to get comfortable in. But I have found that a pillow makes all the difference in the world.

The same goes for a cover of some sort; it may only be a jacket or a sweater, but chances are you're used to sleeping with something over you, and even a partial cover draped around your torso will help you doze off.

4. Bring a variety of things to do. If you're going more than a few hundred miles, one book or magazine won't get you the whole way. And if you choose to think of the trip the way I do, as a windfall of free time, you'll want to think ahead about how best to use it. I even set a rough daily schedule for myself, which I often changed but which helped organize the days. Here are some of the things I did: finished reading six books, worked a few dozen crossword puzzles, outlined a novel, wrote numerous letters and embroidered some pillows for a woman friend and my two daughters. I also spent long periods meditating and reflecting. All of which I had a hard time concentrating on at home.

5. Bring your own food, or at least munchies. The food at bus depots is uniformly lousy, overpriced and nutritionally dubious. I got around that by bringing along a sack full of whole grain bread, various cans of sandwich spread, apples, raw carrots and lots of little cans of fruit juice. At meal stops I fetched plastic utensils, ketchup and mustard from the depot condiment tables, and set up my own alternative cafeteria in a corner away from the cash register. Nobody ever bothered me.

WEEKEND

OPEN STUDIOS

Catch them before they close

This weekend marks your last chance to see this season's Open Studio showings put together by a group of South-of-Market artists. About 100 artists have opened up some 25 of their studios to exhibit, discuss, sell and trade their work, which ranges from x-rated videotapes to ceramic sculpture.

Most of the studios lie between Howard and Townsend from Second to 11th Streets, with a few scattered farther down toward the Mission district. Almost all will be open from noon to 5 pm Friday through Sunday (May 14-16). If you're diligent and don't linger too long over the work of any one New Master, you can see them all on foot in the course of an afternoon.

Carl Christensen displays his paintings and ray gun at 63 Bluxome St.
